Carmel's Bob Shepner (right) is mighty proud to watch his grandson, Erik Shepner (10), pitch Monday afternoon for one of two Carmel teams entered in the Bronco Sectional Tournament for 11- and 12-year-old players at Larson Field. Shepner and teammate Bryan Langslet combined to hurl a no-hitter during the tournament's opening day as Carmel registered a 16-1 victory. Play continues today and throughout the weekend, with the champion advancing to the Bronco World Series, Aug. 8-13 in Monterey. For complete coverage and more photos, see SPORTS, page 16.

November ballot called off, but officials committed to assessment

By PAUL WOLF

IF ALL goes to plan, the county supervisors' decision Tuesday to cancel a November ballot measure on a new Carmel Valley assessment won't hurt long-term progress in finding flood-control solutions.

So explained those close to the planning of a benefit assessment district, which would encompass most properties in Carmel Valley with the aim of financing a program of river maintenance and flood watches.

"It won't slow down our progress," said 5th District Monterey County Supervisor Sam Karas, who persuaded his four supervisorial colleagues to call off the election because the valley is divided on the initial assessment proposal.

Although a new proposal needs to be fashioned, avoiding a time-consuming and divisive election may save many months and much fighting, Karas said.

The assessment is just one of many avenues being taken to prevent a repeat of January and March 1995, when Carmel's Mission Fields neighborhood and many areas along the Carmel River were devastated by floods.

Grand jury, YWCA head urge action on domestic violence

By KRISTI BELCAMINO

A RECENT Carmel Valley murder-suicide following a history of domestic abuse has raised questions about the frequency of this type of violence on the Monterey Peninsula and the services available to the victims.

"It's very important for the community to recognize this glaring and tragic example," said Carol Ludowise of the YWCA of the Monterey Peninsula. "And that violence and abuse against women is not limited to any ethnic or socio-economic group."

In 1994, 2,012 domestic violence calls were received in Monterey County and 1,883 of those calls involved weapons.

Recognizing the urgency of this problem, a Monterey County Civil Grand Jury report released Monday examined domestic violence in the county.

In 1994, Superior Court Judge John

CHS basketball coach shuffle begins anew

Gary Greeno out, Mike Woodie in

By DOUG THOMPSON

AFTER MUCH promise, the Gary Greeno era at Carmel High School has ended just one season after it began.

Greeno, who led the Padre boys varsity basketball team to a 7-5 record in the Mission Trail Athletic League and a victory in the first round of the Central Coast Section playoffs, has been hired in a similar coaching capacity at North Monterey County High School in Castroville.

But the key to the move, Greeno said this week from his Pacific Grove home, is that the school also hired him as a mathematics teacher, something that he strongly desired, but apparently wasn't going to get, from Carmel High.

"I'm disappointed," Greeno, 28, said. "I was looking forward to being there a while. But I can't drive two and a half hours every day."

On weekdays, Greeno was commuting from PG to King City High, where he had been a math instructor for the past two years. When Greeno was hired in May 1995 to replace Rich Frank as the new CHS hoop coach, it was done with the idea that a teaching post would come with it.

Lisa Fraser, CHS' athletic director at the time, told The Pine Cone that finding an on-campus coach "was a top priority." In fact, it was Greeno's teaching abilities that gave him the edge, according to Fraser and then principal Marie Ishida, over Mike Woodie.

Woodie had coached the CHS junior varsity for seven seasons before stepping down after the 1994-95 campaign.

"It was a very hard personal decision," said Ishida, now

MARKET OUT FROM UNDER

■ Real Estate: Area agents say '96 continues upswing that began last year — following discouraging five-year slump.

By PAUL WOLF

HANG ON to your seats because the word is out: Home prices in Monterey County and the Peninsula are well outpacing inflation.

It is not a monumental statement, since inflation is continuing to hover around a low 2 percent. Still, to industry professionals still reeling from the five-year market slump, even modest appreciation must be labeled a breakthrough.

In 1995, single-family home values were up 6 percent from the previous year, according to Kent Nelson, president of the Monterey County Association of Realtors.

Moreover, halfway through 1996, "the market is still strong," Nelson said, noting, "we are comparing the good months this year to the better months of last year."

Stagnant and declining values, as well as slower turnover of property, characterized the real estate recession from late 1989 to late 1994.

The only reason some industry professionals are making cheery pronouncements now is because the market was stagnant for so long. They note that a busier market and observable appreciation are subtle compared to the market boom of the 1980s.

In addition, there remains a backlog of residential properties that have proved slow to sell, thus continuing the "buyer's market" into the summer of 1996.

"People are still looking for good deals, and they are not willing to overpay for housing," said Stephen Poohar, an independent Carmel-based broker.

No comparison

"Things have picked up a little bit, but it's not like the good ol' days," said Lance Monosoff, a Monterey-based broker.

Nor are sellers at the point where they can say they are making a killing. Commissions usually gobble up 5 percent of the sales price, and various other transaction fees and charges eat away another portion.

And another thing is clear, the rise (or decline) in values depends on where the property is located. Consider:

■ In Carmel, median single-family home price has risen from $410,000 in June of last year to $425,000 in June 1996.

■ In Monterey, the median price has climbed in one year from $293,000 to $312,000 last month. The median price was $300,000 in January.

■ In Carmel Valley, however, median prices have

DOMESTIC

Phillips, Chief of Probation Vincent Losteter and District Attorney Dean Flippo asked a domestic violence task force to look at developing a unified response — from police, prosecutors and nonprofit agencies — to domestic violence calls.

This year's grand jury report examined the work of the task force and looked at law enforcement training, sensitivity to victims, education of families and cooperation among all the agencies.

"Education is the key to the whole thing," said Ludowise, a member of the task force.

She said the safety and protection of the abuse victim is the primary concern.

"I think that is what the grand jury is speaking to — the importance of addressing the needs of the victim," she said.

The YWCA, along with other agencies, is ready to help victims of abuse.

"They've got to reach out for help," said Ludowise. "If they call our crisis line, we can give them guidance."

Report findings

It was found Marina and Greenfield had the highest rate of reported domestic violence, with 15 incidents per 1,000 residents. The report noted that this doesn't necessarily mean a higher rate of abuse; it may just mean a higher level of reporting the abuse.

The grand jury report said that although more than 2,000 domestic violence incidents were reported in Monterey County last year, that number may only be 10 percent of what actually occurs.

It was also noted that King City, Pacific Grove, Marina, Salinas, Monterey and Soledad police departments were the only ones that had programs concerning domestic violence.

The report's conclusions included the following: that domestic violence is a significant problem in Monterey County and is increasing; domestic violence is underreported; domestic violence breeds a vicious cycle; and that all agencies involved in dealing with the abuse must work together to stop it.

Ludowise hopes the task force will become an actual council in the next few weeks or months.

"We're bringing together all the components — law enforcement, district attorney's office, judges and nonprofit agencies, mediators — to work directly with the victims," said Ludowise. "We want to come up with a unified approach."

She said a united community effort is what it will take to halt domestic violence.

"We must say 'zero tolerance.' It's just not acceptable."

How to spot a relationship's danger signs

HE LOVES you so much that he doesn't want to share you with your family or friends and always wants to know where you are, who you are with and when you will be home.

Society tells us that behavior like this means we are loved and cared for, but in reality, this behavior is an early warning sign of potential abuse.

Here's a list of potentional danger signs in relationships, contributed by the Monterey YWCA:

1. Intrusion: Wanting to know your whereabouts, who you are with and when you are coming home.

2. Isolation: Wants to spend all your time alone together, cutting you off from friends and family and discouraging your own interests.

3. Possession and Jealousy: Constant accusations of sexual interactions with anyone in your life, such as teachers and friends; accuses you of flirting; monitors what you wear, how you wear it, how much make-up you put on.

4. Prone to anger: Easily angered, quick mood changes, unpredictable behavior, anger out of proportion to the incident.

5. Unknown Pasts and Respect (or lack of) for Women: What is his relationship like with his mother and other women? How does he refer to women? As sex objects? Does he degrade women?

Here are some facts about domestic abuse:

— A woman is assaulted by her partner every 15 seconds.

— More than 50 percent of women are battered at some time in their lives: more than one-third are battered repeatedly every year.

— The former Surgeon General reports that battering is the largest single cause of injury to women in the United States. An average of 10 women a day are killed by their batterers.

— Research over the last 10 years indicates that women who leave their batterers are at a 75 percent greater risk of being killed by their batterer than those who stay.

'Run for the Shelter' set for Aug. 4; will benefit YWCA

THE MONTEREY Peninsula YWCA is holding its 17th annual "Run for Shelter" run/walk Sunday, Aug. 4 to help women and children who are victims of domestic violence.

Last year, more than 700 people participated in the run/walk. This year's festivities include five live bands, food and prizes.

Proceeds from "Run for Shelter" go to the Lawson House Domestic Violence Shelter — a safe haven for women and children fleeing domestic violence.

The registration fee — $17 by mail if postmarked by July 25 and $25 after July 25 and on the day of the race — includes a T-shirt.

The 5 and 10K runs and 5K walk kick off at 9 a.m. Registration is between 7 a.m. and 8:30 a.m. at Lover's Point in Pacific Grove.

Event co-sponsors include The Carmel Pine Cone and Monterey Times.

Now that rodeo's over, we can think Olympics

ALWAYS A magnificent event that brings the world together — at least briefly — this year's Olympics in Atlanta are again well worth the effort.

So say Alan Read of Monterey and Bart Sealy of Carmel Highlands.

IN FACT, judging from coverage by the Monterey County Bland, the Olympics are way up there at THIRD in important events this summer in the world scheme of things — trailing only the Salinas rodeo and the daily Salinas teen-age scene!

A few of us think the Olympics are even BIGGER than those other two — but then we don't have the crack news judgment of experts from Cincinnati and Memphis, so what could we know?

NBC's TV news people, as a whole, have fallen far short of their pledge to provide even treatment to Olympic athletes from all parts of the world and to refrain from being "homers" and cheerleaders for the U.S., say Read and Sealy.

A glaring example, said Sealy, is the woman announcer (the screeching Summer Sanders) at the swimming venue who was so totally concentrated on the U.S. swimmers in two heats that she failed to mention foreign swimmers had won both!

"AND Greg Gumbel," added Sealy, "just ignores everyone but the Americans."

For Alan, the biggest non-story of the Olympics is the U.S.'s so-called "dream team" in basketball. It's more a nightmare, he says.

"THESE arrogant, crude, overpaid louts — Charles Barkley comes quickly to mind — have wasted no time in going out of their way to insult members of weaker teams and smaller countries," Alan continued.

"The 'dream team's' sense of the Olympic spirit is, 'How much we gonna get paid for beating the crap out of these foreign punks?' "

"UNFORTUNATELY, MY dream is not going to happen," Alan added, "but I just wish there were some way the 'dream team' could lose. I'd dance in the streets!"

Good grief, Alan, when you REALLY feel strongly about something, call us again — but let's have no more of this beating about the bush.

P.S. — "Having John Tesh of Entertainment Tonight commentating the Olympics," says Jill Margaret Brown of Carmel Valley, "is like having Mike Tyson commentating the Carmel Bach Festival!"

TODAY'S QUOTE . . . David Pendergrass, Sand City mayor since 1979, who filed for bankruptcy last month for the second time in 13 years, declaring he and his wife are unable to pay $39,700 they owe on 18 credit cards and another $19,000 on a 1995 automobile:

"We've just had problems getting along here."

HOWEVER, the mayor was quick to point out that the bankruptcies have no bearing on the way he handles the Sand City and other area governmental budgets he helps to oversee.

Thus setting everyone's mind at ease.

THESE FOOLISH THINGS . . . There'll always be a gimmick!

Wild John Foley and his wife, Karen, proprietors of the lively Fish Ranch restaurant in Carmel Crossroads, are providing a complimentary glass of Ventana Gold Stripe wine to everyone in the restaurant whenever the U.S. wins a gold medal at the Olympics!

BUT there are rules. First, you have to be in the restaurant at the time it happens on television. Second, you can't already be ploughed. Third, you must be at least 21. Fourth, you cannot have dropped in just to use the loo.

And fifth, you must not refer to the loo at any time as "the John." Call it the loo, the donicker, the head, the latrine, the hopper, the water closet, the conve-

Skeletal remains may be missing man

■ Will dental records match that of Richard DeMoulpied, 79, who disappeared in March of 1993?

By CRAIG ARNOTT

HUMAN SKELETAL remains found by Caltrans workers near Canyon Drive in Hatton Canyon Tuesday might be from a Carmel Meadows man missing since March 1993, according to the Monterey County Coroner's Division.

A dental comparison was conducted yesterday to see if the remains could be those of Richard DeMoulpied, 79, who was reported missing from his home on High Meadow Drive east of Carmel-by-the-Sea.

At the time of his disappearance, he had been suffering from pre-existing dementia and also hypoglycemia, a condition requiring him to eat at regular intervals.

Long search

The Monterey County Sheriff's Search and Rescue Team, according to Lt. Fred Wilson, has spent more than 130 man-hours trying to locate DeMoulpied.

In addition, flyers were posted, numerous tips were supplied by local residents and a psychic was employed to help pinpoint DeMoulpied's location.

In an interview with the Pine Cone two months after her husband's disappearance, Alice DeMoulpied stated, "The immediate week after was the hardest because I kept having hope. But then, after time went on I thought, well, maybe I shouldn't. I almost don't wish that he survived this long."

Results from the dental comparison might be completed today, according to the coroner's division.

IT WAS mistakenly reported last week that the Monterey Peninsula Water Management District's allocation of 150 acre-feet of recycled water will supply the eight jurisdictions with 8.75 acre feet.

In fact, the jurisdictions — Carmel, Monterey, Pacific Grove, Seaside, Sand City, Del Rey Oaks, Monterey County and the Monterey Peninsula Airport District — will each receive 18.75 acre-feet.

U.S. Fish and Wildlife to consider opposing views on sea otter recovery

Fishing industry, environmentalists keep close watch on bay waters

By KENDALL KLYM

NOW THAT the public has had its say, the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service must decide what to do about saving sea otters on the Central Coast.

In two open hearings last week about a revised recovery plan for southern sea otters, a threatened species, advocates of sea otter rights opposed the plan and advocates of fishing and diving rights lauded it.

Ellen Faurot-Daniels

Known as the Southern Sea Otter Recovery Plan Revised, the action, if approved, would deem the species "fully recovered" when it reaches a population of 2,650 and remains at or above that number for three years. If it maintains a population between 1,851 to 2,649 for three years, it would be classified as threatened. If it maintains a population of 1,850 or less, it would be classified as endangered.The current spring population is estimated at 2,278.

Public reaction

Members of the fishing and sport diving industries called the plan commendable, while representatives of environmental groups found it insufficient in terms of ensuring the survival of the otter.

Steve Rebuck of the California Abalone Association said, "The fishing community feels that it has been sacrificed to protect the sea otter. This plan would (balance) the human right to fish and provide protection to the sea otter."

Rebuck pointed out improvements he said have better safeguarded the coast from an oil spill, which has been a primary threat to the animal's existence. State-funded oil spill cleanup projects, oil spill response teams, stricter policies for oil tankers and state-mandated fishing net limitations all have reduced the threat of a spill, he said.

On behalf of Margaret Owings, president of Friends of the Sea Otter, Ellen Faurot-Daniels contradicted Rebuck's statements about safer conditions, noting what she considered the frequency of foreign oil tankers off the Central Coast.

"Those old, rusty Liberian tankers with untrained crews and absentee owners are the cause of tragic oil spills," Faurot-Daniels said.

Chris Harrold of the Monterey Bay Aquarium voiced a split opinion, lauding the efforts of the recovery team that devised the plan, but also criticizing it for not taking advantage of molecular genetic techniques.

He encouraged Fish and Wildlife to monitor genetic diversity, which may be a key factor in figuring out what traits ensure the greatest survival within the species.

"The Monterey Bay Aquarium has the facilities to maintain DNA, tissue and serum samples," he said. "We will work with (the Fish and Wildlife Service)."

Patricia Foulk, public affairs officer for Fish and Wildlife in Sacramento, said the service will address each speaker's opinion when making final decisions about how to revise the plan. She said recovery teams are designed to represent the diverse interests of the public, including oil companies, fishermen, scientists and environmentalists. The public is then called on to review the plan to see if each interest has been addressed, she said.

In response to the first of two meetings at the Hyatt, Foulk said the the public seemed concerned that the southern sea otter "may be considered for delisting before it's ready."

Foulk encouraged people to speak up about the issue, noting that one does not have to be an expert to have an opinion.

Gayle Cureton, a Monterey County resident, focused on the symbolic value of sea otters during the second meeting.

"The sea otter is a symbol for Monterey County," Cureton said. "The idea of it being wiped out shatters me."

Film commission's longtime director steps down, but not out

By CRAIG ARNOTT

WHAT DO the films Turner and Hooch, Junior and Basic Instinct have in common?

Besides being substantial box office draws, they were all partially filmed on the Monterey Peninsula with the help of the Monterey County Film Commission.

Now in its eighth year as a liaison between production companies and the local community, the Monterey-based commission has recently undergone a transition in personnel, with Karen Nordstrand replacing Julie Armstrong as executive director of the nonprofit organization.

Armstrong, a Pacific Grove resident who cited the care of her three small children as contributing to the close of her tenure as executive director, will now become the commission's director of special projects.

Nordstrand has served as assistant director of the film commission for the past five years.

Productive tenure

After serving as the director of communications for the Monterey Peninsula Chamber of Commerce and Visitors & Convention Bureau, Armstrong joined the film commission in 1988 and saw it grow swiftly, from coordinating a handful of shoots per year to currently fielding more than 300 inquiries and helping manage 60 feature, television and commercial projects annually.

But apart from the economic rewards brought by the increased presence of production companies in the area, Armstrong cited two recent, community-outreach projects as the benchmarks of her stewardship of the commission:

■ An inaugural screenwriting contest this spring drew more than 400 entries and culminated with a question-and-answer session with working screenwriters that was an "important way for beginning writers to get feedback and an inner look at the industry," said Armstrong. The contest is expected to continue on an annual basis.

■ This year is also the second in a popular film lecture series in which industry professionals are given a public forum to explain their craft. Forrest Gump composer Alan Silvestri and the head animators of Disney's Toy Story have already appeared, and Jean-Michel Cousteau is scheduled to discuss underwater filmmaking with Pacific Grove cinematographer Chuck Davis this fall.

"It's always rewarding to be able to reach out and give something back to the community," said Armstrong.

Julie Armstrong (left) takes on a new title as Karen Nordstrand takes over as executive director.

New directions

Armstrong's new title as head of special projects will include the handling of an international marketing campaign to coax business from Western European and Japanese production companies, and a venture with the City of Monterey to encourage some of the new wave of multimedia companies to relocate to the Peninsula.

The growth and publicity of the new Institute of Teledramatic Arts and Technology at CSU-Monterey Bay is another of Armstrong's concerns. The program, headed by Luis Valdez (Zoot Suit, La Bamba), trains students in all aspects of film production and benefits from the open, industrial grounds of the former army base, home to several warehouses that have the potential to be converted into sound stages.

ASSESSMENT

Work is underway to remove some riverbank levees and shore up others, particularly south of Carmel and west of Highway 1. The California Department of Transportation is paying for some of that work, while residents in Mission Fields are financing other improvements.

A Nov. 5 ballot measure would have given valley residents a chance to vote on an assessment that would have charged $75.72 a year to households in the 100-year floodplain and $38.36 to parcels at higher elevations.

Opponents, including the Carmel Valley Property Owners Association, argued that homeowners who wouldn't derive direct benefit from the assessment should not have to contribute to it.

Even with a November 1996 approval from the electorate new revenues wouldn't be available before December 1997.

As county officials and members of the Carmel River Coalition go back to the drawing board, they can keep that time table, according to Don Boston, co-chair of the coalition. The key would be to develop a plan that would be acceptable to nearly all in the valley, thus avoiding a protest vote to prompt a ballot measure.

"We recognize that we have to come up with a plan that can get popular support," Boston said.

Forcing the ballot

Opponents of the first assessment plan, led by the Monterey Peninsula Taxpayers Association, gathered nearly 2,000 signatures from registered voters in the valley who oppose the assessment.

Supervisors had the option of holding an election or scrapping the assessment plan altogether. Growing opposition to the plan stirred the Carmel River Coalition, one of its authors, to urge the board to cancel the election.

"I would rather not see us split this community," Karas said.

Third District Monterey County Supervisor Tom Perkins said, "The (Carmel Valley) community needs to get back together and work this thing out."

A key figure in flood-control efforts said calling off the election set the goal of establishing an assessment back a year. "I don't know if the same group of people will be able to put the piece back together or not," said Larry Levine, a twice-flooded Mission Fields resident who played a leading role with the now-disbanded Flood Control Task Force.

As the coalition and officials with the Monterey County Water Resources Agency take another stab at developing an acceptable assessment, Boston noted at least two possible directions for improving the rejected plan:

■ Rework the two-tiered assessment plan into a three- or four-tiered arrangement.

According to Boston, a distinction could be made between people living in the 100-year flood zone and the rarely cited "500-year flood zone." Both groups would contribute to the assessment, but in different amounts.

■ Delete outlying properties from the assessment district if it appears they derive no benefit from the flood watch and river maintenance programs.

By removing some properties, other properties may be put in the position of paying more, Boston added.

Committee gives warm reception to plans for CV Airport

By KRISTI BELCAMINO

IF LARS DE JOUNGE'S vision is realized, the Carmel Valley Airfield will soon house a flock of antique planes.

De Jounge recently signed a 99-year lease for the airfield, renamed it Carmel Valley Vintage Airfield and plans to build 11 homes with hangar-type garages.

It is his retirement dream come true: He plans to attract others who share his passion for vintage aircraft to live on the airfield.

Although he wasn't present, De Jounge's ideas for the airfield received a warm reception from the Carmel Valley Village Improvement Committee July 12.

"It sounds like a situation where we can have our cake and eat it, too," said Glen Gurries, who was sitting in on the meeting.

Gurries is the eldest son of Ron Gurries, owner of Robles del Rio Lodge, where the CVVIC monthly meeting was held.

He said since the lodge overlooks the valley, a view of vintage airplanes would be an attractive addition.

"It's definitely an asset for us," said Gurries. "It appears to be a win-win situation for the village."

Board member Peter Coakley was pleased with the "lower density" of De Jounge's proposal compared to a mini-master plan CVVIC developed in 1988 suggesting a limit of 30 homes if the land is developed.

"I think it would be a wonderful asset," said Coakley. "I really like it."

Architect Dennis Hodgin, who was presenting the plans to the CVVIC, said 11 is a maximum.

"We're not locked into 11," said Hodgin. "If someone came along and wanted two lots for one home, fine. But 11 is the most."

In a later interview, De Jounge concurred and added, "I think it will be something less (than 11) in reality."

The airfield property encompasses nearly 30 acres and is virtually surrounded by residential housing.

Lars De Jounge, who is pictured here with his wife Barbara, plans to attract others to Carmel Valley who share his passion for vintage aircraft.

The proposed two and one-half acre lots will extend out into the landing strip, but the landing strip portion would become easement and common space, much like that which is shared at a condominium development.

De Jounge and Hodgin are both trying to address potential concerns early, such as noise, public access and development standards.

In a later interview, De Jounge said the noise level will not increase, especially because the plane owners will live on the airfield and don't want the excessive noise themselves.

"That's one reason to go vintage," he said. "They don't fly much or make much noise."

"The amount of air traffic will be no more than today — probably less," Hodgin told CVVIC members. "These are people who really like to tinker with their planes, much like people do with vintage cars."

Some residents expressed concerns about losing access to the airfield because of fences or other restrictions.

"There has been public access for 50 years," said resident Steve Austin. "People are concerned they may lose that."

He was reassured by Hodgin the access would remain and that a pedestrian path would be created on the south side of the runway for safety purposes.

"The only thing we're trying to discourage is people walking up and down the runway," said Hodgin.

Hodgin also said there will be strict architectural guidelines for the 11 homes.

De Jounge described them as "nice, rustic, barn-style structures."

De Jounge and Hodgin don't expect construction of the first home — which will serve as a model for the others — to begin for at least another six months.

THE CATALOG BLUES

Carmel woman battles back in war against mail-order magazines

By SANDY RENSVOLD
Special to The Pine Cone

YOU CAN move, you can change your name, but eventually those relentless glossy mail-order catalogs will track you down.

Having moved more than 20 times in my life time so far, I speak from experience. On Jan. 1, 1995, I decided to keep track of every catalog mailed to me for one year, excluding those addressed to "occupant."

One year later, and four filled-to-overflowing garage shelves, here's the tally:

- Catalog count: 544.
- Most received in one day: 13.
- Weight: 152 pounds.
- Height: 4 feet, 6 inches.

The major categories included: clothing, clothing/gift, bed/bath, home furnishing, garden and kitchen. Two of the most unusual catalogs intrigued me. One carried sensual temptations, the other promoted products for spying, and carrying and concealing weapons and recorders. Did big brother know something about me I didn't even know?

Historical perspective

Catalogs have been arriving through the mail for a long time. In days of old, it was the only way for frontier settlers to receive store-bought goods.

Catalogs before the 1860s are fewer in number because they were printed on handmade cotton-rag and linen-rag paper. With the process of wood-pulp paper, catalogs and other advertisements could be turned out more cheaply. Free city mail began nationally in 1863, followed by rural free delivery in 1876, and, it can be said, the rest is history.

Why do consumers order from catalogs and why do manufacturers use catalogs? Author Paul Fussell describes in his book, Class , "People like receiving junk mail. It suggests that someone believes they have money and recognizes that they have the power to choose."

How do our names become known to marketers? Not only do solicitors have your name, phone number and address, but it's likely they know your income, age, marital status and level of education.

Think about the number of times you have filled out surveys, "free vacations" and other contest-entry coupons. What about the few times you did order from a catalog, join an organization, make a donation or send in a warranty registration card? Your name became a part of a marketing data base.

Marketers are clever in ways of collecting information about customers. As the cost of computers and data storage declines, companies are able to maintain huge customer data bases.

Ever wonder why your name and address are requested on some redeemable coupons? At the checkout stand, scanners continually track customer buying habits. The postal service uses a computerized change-of-address system. Large direct-mailers are able to check changes frequently.

Pressure cooker

Susan Lobo of Pacific Grove reported receiving several aggressive follow-up calls from two gift-catalog houses after placing orders.

Pebble Beach retiree Imogen Preston orders yearly Christmas gifts from a food catalog and also reported follow-up phone calls this past year. After three intrusive phone calls pressuring her to place more orders, she firmly warned that she would no longer place her yearly order if she received one more phone call.

Any lifestyle change — a birth, graduation, engagement, marriage, death, real estate sale or purchase — makes your name available to marketing data bases.

Angie Gazman, operations support specialist for Monterey County, says her office at the Salinas Post Office Distribution Center receives numerous consumer complaints regarding junk mail.

Sandy Rensvold knows just what to do with the many catalogs she receives in the mail.

PENINSULA RECYCLING CENTERS

- Big Sur: Andrew Molera State Park (Hwy 1)
- Carmel: Carmel Rancho Center (Behind Brinton's)
- Marina: Marina Landfill (14201 Del Monte Blvd.)
- Monterey: 600 Pacific (Next to fire station)
- Moss Landing: 7881 Sandholt St.
- Pacific Grove: 1212 Forest Ave. (Safeway)
- Seaside: Canyon Del Rey Hwy 1 (K Mart)

"There isn't much we can do," Gazman relates. "As long as the postage is correct, we are obligated to deliver."

Over a two-week period, the center averages more than 400,000 pieces, or more than 20,000 pounds of fourth-class or bulk business mail to be distributed.

Where to turn for help

And be forewarned that it's not an easy task to get your name removed from a list. The following suggestions, however, will help.

- When using an 800 or 900 phone number, tell the representative you do not want your name, address and phone number given to other marketing lists.
- Write or call individual companies and ask to be removed from the mailing list. If catalogs keep arriving, write "refused" or "return to sender" across the address label. The catalog company then becomes responsible for return postage.
- Write Direct Marketing Associations' Mail Preferences Services (P.O. Box 9008, Farmingdale, NY 11735-9008). The service enters your name on the "remove" list. The list is mailed to marketing company members quarterly. It may not stop junk-mail immediately or all of it, as only members are notified and stoppage is voluntary. This association also can be contacted for individuals wishing to receive catalogs for specific items only.
- Avoid filling out product registration cards when purchasing products, or limit the information. Generally a receipt ensures the warranty of the product.
- Publish only your name and phone number in the phone book or consider an unlisted number even though it is more expensive. The phone book is public record and used by mailing list companies. Also, marketing firms make up mailing lists from phone books that are sold to catalog companies.
- Credit reporting firms are required to remove names and addresses from marketing mailing lists if the consumer requests. (See related box below.)
- The Privacy Rights Clearinghouse offers consumers a unique opportunity to learn how to protect their personal privacy. The organization is administered by the University of San Diego's Center for Public Interest Law and funded by the Telecommunications Education Trust.

A toll-free hotline for California consumers to report privacy abuses and request information is available by calling 1-800-773-7748 or by faxing 619/298-5681. Or you may write the Privacy Rights Clearinghouse (5998 Alcata Park, San Diego, CA 92110-2492) for a publication titled, "Junk Mail: How Did They All Get My Address?"

- Contact marketing list brokers and request your name be removed from all their mailing and telemarketing lists. (See related box below.)

Personality profile

On the lighter side, if one were to analyze the variety of catalogs I received this past year, my marketing data base considers me a well-dressed gardener with a gourmet kitchen and well-decorated boudoir. I enjoy fine food and wine, with a yen for chocolates. I occasionally spy on my neighbors and fantasize about fragrances to soothe the mind and enhance my love life.

As frustrating as catalogs are, they do chronicle history and give detailed changes of the way we are and were. They also provide a service to individuals unable to leave home for shopping, or persons living in remote areas, or individuals not having time to shop.

The message most consumers would like to send to catalog companies is to use discretion with their mailing lists.

fallen over the span of a year, from $385,000 to $370,000.

The drop may be the result of the floods of January and March of 1995, which devastated many properties along the river.

"I am a little baffled by Carmel Valley's situation," said Pacific Grove-based appraiser Craig Butorac. "People (looking at property) in the lowland areas are very concerned about the flooding situation. But the whole valley appears to be affected."

■ Continuing stagnant prices are observed in Pebble Beach, where the rise ($499,000 to $502,000) is almost negligible.

Contrary view

Rita Lewis, managing broker of Del Monte Realty Co., said her own experience contradicts the statistics that indicate higher-end Pebble Beach homes aren't moving.

"We've sold some very high-priced properties," she said. "Properties over $1 million have been lagging these last years. There are some really prime properties that are likely to go up (in value) soon."

Butorac pointed to movement in the highest end of the market, explaining that 1996 has seen renewed activity in the previously dormant $1.5 million to $3.5 million range.

"There is more activity in this area than I have seen in the last three or four years," Butorac said.

Forbes Keaton takes leadership of Lyceum

By KRISTI BELCAMINO

FORBES BASTIAN Keaton has been named executive director of the Lyceum of Monterey County after serving on the board of directors for the last six years.

The Lyceum of Monterey County is a nonprofit education organization that provides enrichment classes for students in kindergarten through high school. Keaton stepped in as interim director shortly after Lib Downey resigned as executive director last December.

Keaton said Downey has decided to go back into nursing after 10 years of being away.

"It will be hard to fill her shoes," said Keaton.

But Keaton's experience with the Lyceum includes stints as board president, vice president of programs and as secretary.

Forbes Keaton moves from the Lyceum's interim executive director to permanent director.

Keaton said she believes lyceums are valuable because they provide low cost enrichment programs for students that don't get those through their schools. Lyceums also give students the opportunity to study subjects in depth in a small classroom situation where they can work almost one-on-one with a teacher, "which is very rare these days," she said.

The Lyceum also develops programs with other organizations, such as the Boys and Girls Clubs of the Salinas Valley.

"We bring our expertise, our teachers and our programs and make them available through the grants we received from the many philanthropic organizations," said Keaton.

After Keaton received her bachelor's degree in art history from U.C. Berkeley, she began teaching advanced placement European history and art history at Robert Louis Stevenson School for six years. She presently teaches art history at All Saints' Episcopal Day School in Carmel Valley and plans to continue teaching there.

"I think it is very important to stay in close contact with students and to stay involved in the classroom," said Keaton.

And she will continue her work for the Monterey County History Day, a program she founded and coordinates that encourages students to learn history in a hands-on manner.

Keaton is also a lecturer at the Monterey Museum of Art and has been associated with several philanthropic organizations, most recently serving as a board member of the Monterey County Youth Museum.

Keaton said the Lyceum of Monterey County has been around for 36 years, a feat it could not have achieved without the community.

"(The Lyceum receives support) not only from the school districts, which allow us to conduct our classes free of charge at the school sites, but also a tremendous amount of support from local foundations and corporations," said Keaton.

AIRPORT

But De Jounge said there is no hurry.

"We will build them one at a time, at a slow pace," he said. "We do want to find the right kind of persons. We don't want to rush."

He said he wants the airfield to "cater to fellows with older planes" and become a "little resort" for vintage plane lovers.

"I just imagine in my dream how nice it can be if it is done right."

CUSD board to hear report tonight on benefits of new state education funding

By KENDALL KLYM

THANKS TO increased state spending on public education, smaller class sizes and refurbished facilities may become a reality for the Carmel Unified School District.

CUSD Superintendent Joe Jaconette will present an analysis at tonight's board meeting of how a recently announced 11-percent increase in state education funding will affect the district in the following areas:

- Class size.
- Reading programs.
- School facilities.

Jaconette was unavailable for comment prior to the meeting, which will begin at 7 p.m. in the conference room at the CUSD office on Carmel Valley Road.

Doling out the money

Adding up to $30 billion for the 1996-97 school year, the new budget includes:

- $771 million for class size reduction.
- $200 million for enhancing early reading programs.
- a one-time minimum of $25,000 given to each school.
- $200 million for refurbishing or building facilities to reduce class size .

State Superintendent for Public Schools Delaine Eastin praised the allotment as the "best budget for

USE CAUTION WITH HUMMINGBIRD FEEDERS

You don't have to be a bird enthusiast to enjoy seeing hummingbirds. But before you put up a feeder, The SPCA suggests you make sure your feeder is the best, for the birds!

While feeders filled with bright syrupy liquid can attract lots of birds, they can also cause problems for the very creatures you want to enjoy. If you put up a feeder, make sure you clean it at regular intervals to prevent bacteria from growing in the bottle and giving hummingbirds beak rot. Also, consider that if hummingbirds become dependent on this sugary nectar, they might not forage for insects as they should for a balanced meal.

Instead of a feeder, The SPCA suggests putting in plants that naturally attract hummers - fuschias, Mexican sage, bottle brush, penstemon, honeysuckle and geraniums - then sit back and enjoy these tiny, active feeders enjoying mother nature's nectar!

education in 13 years."

"This is a much deserved boost for our schools," Eastin said. "Our goal must be to ensure that it is the beginning of a sustained effort to improve schools and not just a one-year phenomenon."

California ranks 50th in the nation in class size, school libraries, librarians, nurses and counselors and 45th in instructional materials and computers.

Eastin said the increase would move California a few notches closer to the national average on pupil spending.

Local effects

On the local front, CUSD has spent $117,000 to add two leased portable classrooms and an estimated $188,395 to rewire and remodel a former kitchen into a computer lab at River School — all without the help of state funding.

"If that could have been funded by the state, it would have been great," said Judy Long, director of business services for CUSD.

Some of the details of the allotment must be ironed out before it can work for the district, she said in reference to Carmel Valley High School, which would receive $25,000 in spite of its low population.

"It's wonderful to have the government giving (money) to schools, but it has created specific guidelines telling districts how to use (the funds)," she said. "Each school district will have a challenge, and we'll do everything we can to try and make it work."

In addition to meeting the guidelines of the state while trying to distribute the funds equitably, CUSD must also face parents who have their own ideas about how to use the funds.

Timmi Sellers, an active Carmel Middle School PTA member who plans to attend the meeting, said she believes the key to making the allocation work lies in the hands of the district's administrators.

"I think some of the money should be spent on sending administrators to national conferences," Sellers said. "Our administrators are behind in terms of what is progressive in education."

Sellers also said she was pleased to see an allotment specifically dedicated to improving school sites.

JOE FITZPATRICK: Rocky Mountain low at rodeo?

nience, the biffy, the facilities, etc. — just not "the John."

GOT it? OK, enjoy your Chardonnay!

THIS column was delighted to see in television footage of the rodeo parade through downtown Salinas last week that not only was the American Flag being carried along, but so was the Coors flag!

This seems only fitting and proper, for the Coors flag symbolizes everything that is good and decent about the rodeo.

WE humbly suggest to the great poohbahs of the rodeo that they adopt this magnificent banner as the OFFICIAL flag of the rodeo, but with one small addition:

Besides the stirring battle cry, "Coors!," the emblem should also bear a small, tasteful illustration of a calf or wild horse with a compound fracture of the leg!

TOGETHER, the word "Coors!" and the poignant illustration would capture the true spirit of this meaningful annual spectacle.

Just glad to contribute my bit to this awe-inspiring yearly event.

BY THE WAY . . . In last week's spellbinder, we mentioned Bong! restaurant — located down a flight of stairs on the sidewalk of Dolores near Fifth in Carmel.

We said the intriguing name has no special meaning in the Chinese language, but it DOES have special meaning to the owner of the place — it's his first name!

NO, silly, his last name isn't Crosby (or even Crisby), but Kim! His full name — Bong Gyu Kim. His wife, who is co-proprietor, is Mi Ji Kim.

(I ask you, where else do you get ALL the details?)

AS LONG as we're name-dropping, here are a few more — Kevin Costner, Don Johnson, Rene Russo, Cheech Marin and Keanu Reeves!

All five were at The Inn at Spanish Bay early this week being interviewed by all sorts of film reporters about their new movies.

WELL, one new movie in particular — Tin Cup, in which the first four of the above-named are featured. (My first guess was it had to be the life story of a panhandler, but nope — it's about golf!)

As for Keanu Reeves, he isn't in that movie, but I assume he's in another one or he wouldn't be out there being interviewed, would he?

(Hey, Hollywood reporting is easy!)

NOW THEN . . . Is it those hot lights on the set or is it the glamour of summonses, demurrers and habeas corpuses?

Whatever it is, something has kindled a flame between Karina Rusk, the belle of KCCN-TV, and Sean Phelan O'Brien, a Carmel attorney!

LOOK carefully at Karina's third finger, left hand, next KCCN news program and you'll see sparkling evidence that a lawyer has been lurking about!

The two have set no wedding date, as yet.

MILESTONES . . . We keep falling behind on these, but we have resolved to straighten up and fly right. Try these:

Last Sunday (July 21) — Robert Canon (former owner of The Clock restaurant), 77; Don Knotts, 72; Robin Williams, 44.

Monday (July 22) — Ed Haber, 84; Alex Trebek, 56; Bob Dole, 73.

Tuesday (July 23) — Polly Gonzalez (former KCBA news anchor) and Woody Harrelson, both 35.

Wednesday, (July 24) — Barry Bonds, 32.

Friday (July 26) — Carmine Gallo (former KCBA news anchor), 31; Mick Jagger, 53.

Monday (July 29) — Peter Jennings, 58.

Tuesday (July 30) — Paul Anka, 55; Arnold Schwarzenegger, 49.

LASTLY . . . Say you've just signed a contract that will pay you $123 million over the next seven years, what words of wisdom would you impart to a panting public?

It happened to basketballer Shaquille O'Neal last week, and here were HIS words for posterity:

"I JUST wanna keep drinking Pepsi and wearing Reeboks."

Later on, Shaquille assured everyone he is a bargain because: "I've won at every level except college and the NBA."

Proof enough.

As society changes, women need to manage own money

TRADITIONALLY, WOMEN have kept the household accounts while their husbands handled investing. But these days, women are likely to have their own careers. They get married later in life and may get divorced. And, on average, they live about seven years longer than men.

Saving for retirement is crucial for both men and women. Even small amounts can go toward U.S. savings bonds or mutual funds with an automatic savings plan. If women have more money to work with, they should diversify their holdings among several types of investments.

The younger women are, the more they should consider growth investments, which are likely to increase their nest egg in excess of the inflation rate.

True, one's strategy may change over time, depending on one's age, total assets, tax bracket and tolerance for risk. But one should never totally stop investing for growth.

Insurance a key

Of course, picking winning investments isn't the only goal of good financial planning. Adequate insurance is also essential. For example, disability is far more common among middle-aged people than death, yet disability insurance is often overlooked.

A woman should consider supplementing any employer's coverage with her own policy. Most people aim to replace 60 to 80 percent of pretax income, since disability payouts are generally tax-free. A disability policy should cover partial disability as well as total disability. She should be able to save money on premiums by opting for a longer waiting period before receiving benefits.

For women who have dependents, they need enough life insurance to protect them. This is true even if one is a married stay-at-home mom, if one's absence as caregiver would create financial hardship for her family.

Finally, women should prepare an estate plan that meets their needs, and then review it with their accountant and attorney every few years to ensure that its current with the tax law and reflects any changes in personal circumstances.

■ Your old tax return, one more time

Out of sight, out of mind. When it comes to old tax returns, that's an approach many people like to follow. But before you completely forget about your old tax forms, you may wish to consider filing an amended return.

If you made a mistake on a prior-year tax return, an amended return is the way to set things right. Arithmetic errors, missing information and oversights are all fairly common, and generally there's no reason to fear filing an amended return — whether you owe money to the IRS or vice versa.

Certain special situations can also trigger amended returns. For example, if you suffer a casualty loss in a presidentially-declared disaster, you may deduct the loss on your tax return for the year of the disaster, or you may amend the prior-year return and deduct the loss in that year.

The best strategy depends on your tax bracket for both years, plus other factors such as the amount of your loss and whether it occurred early or late in the year.

An amended return can help ease the sting of certain business and worthless security losses. You also may benefit from an amended return if there's a retroactive change in the tax law as a result of new legislation or a favorable court ruling.

Note that an amended return is generally required if you previously deferred gain on the sale of your home, but failed to purchase a replacement home within two years.

The Golden Years

By Myles Williams

Depression can suject elderly people to serious medical risks. A study of more than 10,000 people over 65 who had high blood pressure found those with depresion suffered strokes at almost three times the rate of others. Depression also slows recovery from a variety of diseases. About one in five seniors is depressed to some degree, according to mental health experts. Many families err in accepting depression as normal in aging. In fact, elderly depression often can be treated successfully.

With the likes of forward Ben Cook (left) and Ryan Sanchez (right), Gary Greeno had reason to be confident about his team's chances just prior to the first game of the 1995-96 boys' varsity basketball season at Carmel High School. Although the Padres got out of the gates slowly, Greeno (center) helped get the team back on track and it finished by winning seven of its last eight league games. After just one season, Greeno is out at CHS and on his way to North Monterey County High School.

with the Santa Cruz City School District, describing her selection of Greeno over Woodie.

One year later, however, it is Woodie who has been selected to lead the Padres' varsity team.

Carmel High Athletic Director Tom Clifford confirmed Tuesday night that Woodie is the school's choice over Hans Schmidt, a former assistant basketball coach at Cal Poly-San Luis Obispo who will be a new English teacher at CHS next month.

Schmidt, who like Greeno comes to Carmel after serving as head coach of the King City High junior varsity team, has been named as the Padres' JV mentor. He had Greeno's blessing as his successor on the varsity level.

"Mike had the scales tipped in his favor because he already knew the kids," Clifford noted.

Woodie, who was unavailable for comment, served last season as an assistant coach for the Monterey Peninsula College women's basketball program.

He had been employed as a grounds supervisor at CHS before resigning in 1995. Clifford said although he wasn't certain if Woodie would be employed in a similar position at CHS, the athletic director vowed the new coach would nonetheless be "a visible figure" on campus.

Not lost in the whole coaching shuffle is that Greeno's departure came as a jolt to Clifford.

"I know he wanted to remain at Carmel High," Clifford said. "Personally, I would have loved it if he would have remained. Unfortunately, we weren't prepared to make him a teaching offer before he needed to respond to North Monterey County's offer.

"I'm disappointed it didn't work out."

More disappointment

It was clear from Greeno's tone that he, too, wished things had worked out differently.

"After I got the offer from North County, I told Eric Paulson (CHS principal) I wanted to stay at Carmel," related Greeno, who was initially attractive to CHS after leading the King City JVs to a 21-4 record during the 1994-95 season.

Paulson, who is on vacation, was unavailable for comment.

After a slow start to the 1995-96 season, the Padres, under Greeno, caught fire and won seven of their final eight league games. In addition, CHS won its first Central Coast Section playoff game — a 68-50 verdict over San Jose Academy.

Carmel was eliminated in the second round, falling 61-49 to MTAL rival Pacific Grove.

"It was fun to see the kids come around," said Greeno in reflection of his one and only campaign at CHS.

At the conclusion of the season, Greeno told the newspaper his Padres "were a true example of how a team can come together and do a good job."

Clifford was equally impressed.

"He stepped in and molded a team into a tremendous force," Clifford said. "They struggled at times — it wasn't an easy season. But he got the kids to play to their potential."

Greeno said Woodie will have a solid nucleus to build around with talented forward Ben Cook, Nick Cardinale, Chris Purdy and Joe Silverie returning. Ryan Sanchez, the team's leading scorer and captain, graduated in June, as did Amir Masliyah, John Porteous, Matt Allen and Brian Christensen.

At North Monterey County, however, Greeno will be inheriting less than a rosy situation. In fact, he termed NMC's basketball program as "dismal," but added that he's looking forward to turning around the fortunes of the Monterey Bay League competitor.

More moves

In another basketball coaching development at CHS, Dave Stainbrook has been named to lead the girls' varsity team. Allan Lewis, who coached the varsity squad last season, will take over the girls' JV team.

Since Stainbrook served as the boys' freshman coach a season ago, Clifford said he is actively seeking a replacement. Anyone interested in coaching the CHS boys' freshman team should contact the athletic director at 624-1821.

How to play golf and feel good

IT'S MORE than just another charity tournament — it's a big event on the Monterey Peninsula.

It's the 14th annual Hospice Golf Scramble, benefiting Hospice of the Central Coast, scheduled for Tuesday, Sept. 3 at Carmel Valley Ranch.

A big event? Let's put it this way — any fund-raising endeavor for Hospice is a big event.

Like your local fire department, Hospice is one of those organizations we sometimes take for granted — until we need it. And it's not until we need it that we realize what an important service Hospice provides for our community.

Many local golfers in our community do realize the importance of Hospice. Dan Tibbitts, Cricket Garcia and Clark Struve — event co-chairpersons — donate much of their time to make this event a success, along with Clint Eastwood (who donated the perpetual trophy), Lesley Miller, Helen Westland, Marcy Hyman and others. They give their time and donations so that Hospice can be there when you need it.

The tournament entrance fee, which includes meals and lavish prizes, is $275 per player. You can win a trip to Hawaii or a new Lexus, or bid on auction items, such as a Seabourn Golf Cruise and a round of golf with Johnny Miller at Pebble Beach.

Feel good about yourself and play in the big event on Sept. 3. Someday, you'll be glad you did.

■ From The Clubhouse: Space is available for your five-some, and corporate sponsors are needed for the Hospice Golf Scramble. Call Jim Bennett at 642-2035. Hospice has set a goal of $100,000 for this year's event ... The American Red Cross Invitational (another great charity event) will be held at Rancho Cañada on Aug. 22. Call Dennis Volkman at 577-2114 ... The Dunes and Shore courses at Monterey Peninsula CC will be the first local courses to require soft spikes beginning on Aug. 1. Already tremendous putting surfaces, MPCC greens may become the finest in the state before long.

Kenny Kleinkopf rounds the bases after his solo HR.

Two Carmel teams are among the seven-team field, which also includes squads from Monterey, Seaside, Marina and two from Pacific Grove.

Carmel's "Red" team got off on a winning note Monday night when it routed Pacific Grove's "Red" team 16-1. Carmel pitchers Bryan Langslet and Erik Shepner combined on a no-hitter.

Kenny Kleinkopf led the hitting parade, with three hits, including a solo home run. Bin Jonsson and Shepner each contributed two hits, while Mark Ferlito and Erick Carl had two RBIs apiece. Joey Aguilar chipped in with a hit and an RBI.

Carmel's "Red" team next plays at 11 a.m. Saturday.

Today's action at Larson Field will pit Monterey versus the winner of Tuesday's game between Seaside and Carmel's "Gray" team. The Seaside-Carmel game was halted Tuesday evening after 10 innings with the score tied 6-6. The game was to be resumed Wednesday afternoon after Pine Cone press deadline.

If Carmel's "Gray" team lost, it will play at 5 p.m. Friday.

The schedule calls for three games Saturday and Sunday, with starting times at 11 a.m., 1:30 p.m. and 4 p.m. each day.

The double-elimination tournament most likely will conclude Monday night with the championship game at 5 p.m., but could extend into Tuesday if a team from the loser's bracket wins that Monday contest, said Aletha Parker, tournament co-chair. If necessary, Tuesday's game also would start at 5 p.m.

Admission prices are as follows: $3 adults, $2 children 13-17, $1 senior citizens and free for children 12 and under.

Here's a look at the players and coaches comprising the two Carmel teams:

The Almost Tolerable Fitness Column

By BILL BURLEIGH

WHEN I LEFT you last week you rushed out and bought some super comfortable running shoes. Right? Now, let's put them to use.

I don't expect you to start your training by running. That's the biggest mistake new runners make: running. More people have given up running from starting out running than for any other reason. Why? Because, without lots of preparation, it's too hard, too much effort, too unpleasant.

So . . . push the off button on your remote, put on your new shoes and head for one of the extraordinary areas we have for walking: Pt. Lobos, Monterey Recreation Trail, Scenic Drive in Carmel, Garland Park, Carmel Beach, and the like.

ILLUSTRATION/SHELL FISHER

We are blessed with the most beautiful training area in the world — roads and trails that folks in Nevada would kill for.

Now, stroll. Even shuffle if that suits you. You are in no hurry; you have lots of time to train for the Carmel Fine Arts 5K on Sunday, Oct. 6. Twenty minutes of actual motion on the road is plenty.

Then go home and have something refreshing to drink. Juice, a cup of coffee, a beer. You've earned it, you've started a new lifestyle and you've started down the road to feeling better.

Dress appropriately for the weather. You don't need any $200 sweatsuits or Calvin Klein shorts. When you bought your shoes the main goal was comfort; the same applies for clothing. Carmel fog might mean jeans and a windbreaker, whereas Carmel Valley heat means shorts and a T-shirt.

And, as I mentioned when you bought your shoes, leave your vanity at home. Comfort is more important than appearance.

Try to get in about four or five walks this week. In 20 minutes, you should be able to cover a mile, and that's a good start.

New sponsor

The Carmel Fine Arts 5K is pleased to announce that we have a new major sponsor: M.L. Stern, an investment firm at the Crossroads Shopping Center. They have become our first Silver Sponsor.

We expect that, after all of our bills have been paid, their entire cash contribution will be dedicated to open space preservation. Our thanks to M.L. Stern.

Until next week, and a new disclosure for mental and physical health, Happy Feet. And Walk that Walk.

PB Equestrian Classic to continue through next week; other events slated

THE PEBBLE Beach Equestrian Center will continue the 49th annual Pebble Beach Equestrian Classic through Sunday, Aug. 4.

The free events begin at 8 a.m. and last until 5:30 p.m. each day, with no events scheduled for Monday, July 29. The Pebble Beach Equestrian Center is located along 17 Mile Drive on Portola and Alva Lane.

Approximately 550 horses from the West Coast are featured in the Classics, the second largest horse show in California.

On the event's final day — Aug. 4 — the $25,000 Pebble Beach AGA Grand Prix will be held, featuring competitors riding for speed over an Olympic-caliber jump course.

A benefit luncheon for the Family Resource Center, a private nonprofit organization that offers preventative child abuse programs, will also be held that day.

More information about the classic can be obtained by calling 624-2756.

■ In a related event, the Juvenile Diabetes Foundation, an international voluntary health agency which raises more money for diabetes research than any private health agency in the world, will host a Children's Fun Fair from 10 a.m. to 3 p.m. Saturday at the PB Equestrian Center.

More information: 626-6254.

Local Olympian to perform Tuesday

OLYMPIC SYNCHRONIZED swimmer Heather Pease, a native of Carmel Valley, will make her debut in Atlanta at 9 a.m. on Tuesday.

The finals for synchronized swimming are scheduled for Friday, Aug.2.

Pease, who graduated from Robert Louis Stevenson in 1991 and St. Mary's College in 1996, was named to the Olympic team in October after a strong showing at the Olympic Trials in Indianapolis.

Pease's squad is favored to win the gold in the team competition, but will have to overcome a strong Chinese delegation in singles and doubles competitions.

Salinas' Alvin Harrison also will be competing next week in Atlanta in the men's 400 meters competition. In the mid-June trials, Harrision qualified with a third-place finish behind Michael Johnson and Butch Reynolds.

CV Fiesta run, walk on tap for Aug. 3

THE SEVENTH annual Carmel Valley Fiesta 5K/10K Run and Family Walk will take place Saturday, Aug. 3.

The race will begin at 9 a.m. at Del Fino Place in Carmel Valley Village. Race-day registration, with a fee of $22, is available from 7:30 to 8:30 a.m.

The pre-registration fee is $17. A T-shirt is included with registration.

CV benefit assessment district should actually benefit those footing bill

THERE IS much to be said for the conventional wisdom that people are at their most generous and helpful in the midst of a disaster.

This refreshing truth of human nature was shown during the floods of January and March 1995. The sight of communal sandbagging is the very image of mutual concern in a time of stress.

Another aspect of human nature is our tendency to revolt when we feel our generosity is being yanked out of us, whether by government or fellow citizens, in the form of taxation of assorted fees.

In this light, it is understandable that many Carmel Valley residents have vowed to oppose the initial proposal for a benefit assessment district to pay for river maintenance, flood-control planning and flood watch operations.

We commend the Monterey County Board of Supervisors for canceling the November ballot on the issue and agreeing to send the matter back to the drawing board.

Further, we respect the Carmel River Coalition's decision to withdraw support of the very plan it helped create.

Two-tiered

The derailed plan called for a two-tiered system encompassing about 8,000 single-family parcels in Carmel Valley:

Households in the Carmel River's flood zone, the so-called Zone A, would have paid $75.72 a year. Meanwhile, Zone B included far more parcels on the outlying ridge-line areas, which are not subject to flooding. The yearly assessment for these highlanders would have been $38.36.

Although each parcel in Zone B would have contributed less, together the group's share would have been more — $218,000 of annual revenue for Zone B compared to Zone A's $111,000.

The coalition worked under the assumption that all properties within the "drainage basin" contributed to the flooding threat and thus should be part of the assessment. We disagree with that premise.

Indeed, because $38 a year is not a lot of money, we run the risk of sounding petty and ungenerous. But there is a principle at stake.

A benefit assessment should live up to its name. Those who have suffered property damage or are truly at risk should be glad to finance what affords them protection.

It appears that coalition members, working with county officials, gave in to the temptation to tax the many to lighten the financial burden on the few. When that unfair approach seemed headed for conflict and widespread dissatisfaction, supervisors had the sense to start the process over.

Watching a secret unfold

Dear Editor:

In this, my first Carmel Bach Festival, David Gordon has made a wonderful impression on me, though perhaps in a different way than he has upon the thousands of concert-goers who know him as the great vocal performer and interpreter of Bach.

I have been getting to know David Gordon the teacher — not as one of his performing students, but by the entirely unterrifying expedient of attending the Virginia Best Adams master class, where we lucky onlookers get to watch other people being improved.

And I must say, it has been like watching a secret unfold. Before our eyes, already very talented and able students undergo a metamorphosis of understanding, and we are ourselves transformed. Student and onlooker again and again enjoy a revelation of meaning by following Mr. Gordon's wonderfully sensitive reading of the musical text.

Baroque music, I am coming to understand, is not so much about what the performer feels as it is about what he is able to make the listener feel. And in that subtle distinction lies a whole world of possible difference. I suspect it lies somewhere near the heart of the Baroque secret, and of Mr. Gordon's own beautifully affecting vocal style.

One week ago, I had never attended a master class. Now I wonder that many more concert-goers do not take advantage of these ideal opportunities to refine their taste and enlarge their listening pleasure with a look behind the scenes.

I am so grateful to Mr. Gordon, to the donors and to the directors of the Carmel Bach Festival for making these public classes possible. You may be sure that for the remainder of this year's festival I will be in a front-row seat.

Still I should not be altogether sorry to arrive early someday to see Mr. David Gordon or Ms. Elizabeth Walfisch or one of their colleagues teach, only to find myself, with pleasure, having to squeeze in at the back.

A matter of pride

Dear Editor:

I was recently reminded of the Carmel Residents Association's generous contribution of sidewalk cleaning to the business community.

Two gentlemen were sitting on a bench outside my wife's store, The Cubby Hole, when the subject of "how clean our sidewalks looked" came up. I mentioned that the residents' association was responsible for both the idea and much of the funding.

They were both incredulous that a local group of citizens would invest time, energy and money into a beautifying project. I could picture these gentlemen coming from Detroit, Chicago or any large city and thinking Carmel's sidewalks could never look as bad as what they're used to and yet the local community feels the need to clean them.

Maybe people are more respectful of their environment when all around are cared for businesses, landscaping, streets, sidewalks, parks. Maybe they're less likely to litter when walking along well-maintained sidewalks and streets.

There is a lot of wear and tear on the city's infrastructure when its biggest industry is tourism. Carmel's residents take a lot of pride in where they live and walk and shop and eat. And the business community has a vested interest in preserving the downtown area so that it never loses its charming appeal to the tourists.

Restoring Sunday library service a step in recovery

Dear Editor:

The Carmel Public Library Foundation is delighted that the Carmel City Council voted to allocate funds for reopening Harrison Memorial Library on Sunday afternoons. Many of our donors have expressed their wish for this.

It is a step in the recovery of services from the serious cuts in staff and hours that our library had to make several years ago. We are proud that our fund-raising efforts enabled us to give the library more than $110,000 in the last fiscal year for books, equipment and programs to help fill the void left by the withdrawal of county funds.

Together, the city and the Carmel Public Library Foundation are making a difference and the community appreciates it.

We hope that future increases in funds from both sources will enable more restoration of Harrison Memorial Library's important services to the people of the Carmel area.

Merci beaucoup!

BY THE CARMEL VALLEY PROPERTY OWNERS ASOCIATION

Water directors manage to be consistently illogical

By GEORGE BOEHLERT
CVPOA Water Management Committee Co-chair

(Editor's Note: This is another column in a series authored by the Carmel Valley Property Owners Association about issues of significance in the valley. The views expressed in this column are those of the CVPOA board.)

EVER THINK that the Monterey Peninsula Water Management District (MPWMD) directors have their heads stuck in the dry sand of the Carmel River? Judging by the action they've taken at the July board meeting, one is led to believe that is the case.

The water board has adopted Ordinance No. 84, which allocates 150 acre-feet to the MPWMD jurisdictions. The first reading of the ordinance has been done, and the second reading will occur at the August board meeting. The ordinance is slated to go into effect in October, with another 150 acre-feet allocated in perpetuity.

In February, 1989, the board approved the Pebble Beach reclamation project to make a minimum of 800 acre-feet per year of treated water available for re-use, mainly for golf course irrigation.

In exchange for their $34 million investment in the sewer-recycling project, the Pebble Beach Co. would be given 380 acre-feet of water for a new golf course and new homes. The remaining 420 acre-feet would revert to the board. In their wisdom, the board wisely designated its part to drought reserve.

Calls from the local jurisdictions spurred former MPWMD General Manager Jim Cofer, who died in June 1995, to suggest in 1994 that 150 acre-feet might be used for development without jeopardizing the drought reserve.

In May of that year, the water board directors felt that the reclamation project was not producing the promised water. Consequently, they agreed to hold back on allocating the "found" water.

A juicy plum

This unallocated water, however, hung out there like a juicy plum until this year, when water district staff produced an initial study recommending that the board allocate it.

Relying on environmental impact report (EIR) data produced years ago when the water production limit was substantially higher, the study concluded that use of this water would have no effects on the environment.

So what's wrong with loosening up with a little extra water?

First of all, the reclaimed water production has not reached the anticipated levels. Second, the water being produced is too salty for the delicate, thirsty greens and has required augmentation with potable water.

In the first six months of 1996, the Pebble Beach Co. cut the percentage of reclaimed water being used on its golf courses by 50 percent from 1995. The remainder, of course, is coming from the Carmel River via the Cal-Am.

The State Water Resources Control Board has ordered that Cal-Am find more than 10,000 acre-feet of water to replace that being pumped from the Carmel River illegally. (Talk about environmental impacts!)

Then and now

The MPWMD found it expedient at the time of the hearings in Sacramento to align itself with Cal-Am to advance its plans for the New Los Padres Dam as the solution to the problem. Now, it is expedient to call it Cal-Am's problem, not a water management problem.

The closeness of the vote, 4-3, offers no consolation.

Dissenters left good reason to question the action. Director Robert Ernst said he was afraid that the board will waltz into protracted litigation, while Director Dick Ely, who joined Ernst and Jim Hughes in voting against the allocation, said, "They are allocating water I don't believe we have."

Directors Burkleo, Karas, Haddad and Pendergrass supported the measure, apparently buying into the sentiment that the allocation will take care of the "health and welfare" of the eight jurisdictions. What about the health

The 'human' factor

Dear Editor:

During the Monterey Peninsula Water Management District's public hearing to approve the release of 150 acre-feet of water to our community, the remarks of those who oppose such a move followed their usual pattern.

Their speakers came to the microphone to demand that the 150 acre-feet of water not be allowed to be released to the affected cities and county. Their reasons ranged from the need to supply water to the Carmel River, its steelhead inhabitants, or place it in the established drought reserve.

Of course, no one will argue against these reasonable demands. However, rarely did I hear the speakers mention the need to service human needs. It was as if we "humans" did not exist and the river, the fish and the drought reserve were more important than human needs.

So, let us examine what the 150 acre-feet will be able to accomplish. In the unincorporated area of the Fifth District, a portion of water will go to the Carmel Valley Community Park, while another portion goes to the planned community center for boys and girls; a portion is designated for a senior residential center; and above all, portions will go to people already owning single lots of record as well as those who are in need to remodel their homes or construct a "granny" unit.

Also, the affected cities and the county will contribute two acre-feet each to sustain the Community Hospital's new Cancer Treatment Facility.

Further, it is important that everyone realize that the 150 acre-feet comes from the Pebble Beach Co.'s Reclamation Plant and is not included in the State Water Resources Control Board's decision regarding Cal-Am's illegal diversion of water from the Carmel River.

They deserve an 'Academy' award

Dear Editor:

Sensational network videotape of Rodney King, the Riverside beatings and the O.J. trial fresh in my mind, the interest with which I approached the first class was flavored with a considerable degree of skepticism, cynicism and even, perhaps, antagonism.

From the comments made by my classmates that first night at the Carmel Citizen's Police Academy, I could tell I was not alone.

Very quickly, the scales fell from my eyes. I had no idea how:

- much legal knowledge policemen must have to enforce our laws;
- many obstacles the laws of our free society — which legitimately protect the rights of the individual — throw up every day for law enforcement;
- many demanding skills must be learned and constantly honed;
- truly dangerous it can be for an officer alone out there on the streets at 1 a.m. — yes, even in Carmel.

But the thing that impressed me most is how fortunate we are to have the caliber of men and women who make up the Carmel Police Department. Without exception, I found them to be intelligent, hard-working, caring people — truly decent people who are somehow able to keep their mission of protecting and serving us, the people of the community, uppermost in their mind despite the disrespect, harassment and confrontation they routinely encounter.

In a bad-news business like theirs, it's surprising how well they are able to maintain good humor.

The process of revelation was not uniquely mine: 17 of us started the 11-week course and 17 finished. No class had fewer than 15 participants and most were attended by all 17! This is testimony to the excellence of the men and women of the Carmel Police Department who presented the academy and to its outstanding organization and content.

Take a bow, Police Chief Don Fuselier and Lt. William Uretsky, and the entire team. The Carmel Citizen's Police Academy is an excellent program.

I sincerely recommend it to anyone interested in the community and our well-being. The more we know about what the men and women in the blue suits do out there, the better.

Donald Sullivan, Carmel

What's New at the Carmel Library

Local kids going for the gold

MARK YOUR calendars for 10:30 a.m. Wednesday, Aug. 7, and join us for the Summer Reading Program Wrap-Up Party. There will be games, refreshments and a raffle in the Children's Department at Park Branch Library.

This summer, more than 300 children are participating in our Summer Olympics "Go For The Gold" Summer Reading Program. To date, the following awards have been earned:

- Gold Medals: 28 readers for 40 hours of reading.
- Silver Medals: 64 readers for 25 hours of reading.
- Bronze Medals: 112 readers for 15 hours of reading.

Reading awards are provided by a gift from Cindy Murphy to the Carmel Public Library Foundation for the Summer Reading Program.

And, now, for a look at our recommended selections of the new books at Harrison Memorial Library:

Angels Flying Slowly
By Jill Roe

❑ A witty novel set in a British convent boarding school. This novel captures the atmosphere of the '50's and provides an unexpected ending.

Where Love Goes
By Joyce Maynard

❑ Written by a young, Generation X author, this novel succeeds because of the funny, disturbing and true voice of the central character. Maynard writes realistically about the trying and often humorous conflict in maintaining relations in the '90's.

Jury Duty
By Laura Van Wormer

❑ Most of our experiences at jury duty have been scenes of long lines, mass cattle calls and interminable waits. However, the author of this novel turned her actual jury experience into a smart fast-paced mystery novel. A definite page-turner.

The Broken Promise Land
By Marcia Muller

❑ The latest Sharon McCone mystery is centered in the country music business. McCone fans will be waiting for her latest, but readers new to Ms. Muller's mysteries probably want to begin with an earlier novel in order to become acquainted with the author's central cast of characters.

and welfare of the people in the district if they are forced to return to a mandatory usage of 50 gallons per day by the state?

The legislation creating the MPWMD contained a lot of language addressing reclamation projects, suggesting that reclamation would be a primary goal of this board. This reclamation project, however, is the first one of its kind in the district.

The MPWMD was created to manage the water resources of the Carmel River and was right to approve a project which would recycle nonpotable water. The board missed the boat, however, in failing to take action when it became known that overpumping was damaging the Carmel River. It is missing the boat now when it continues to approve new water uses without a plan to make up the deficit water.

Folks in Carmel Valley want a healthy river in the summer again, with green banks and fish instead of dry sand. The respective mayors and majority of the water board's directors want more connections while maintaining green golf courses and parks in the cities, provided by the same illegally pumped water that keeps the Carmel River from running. No environmental impact indeed!

Voice your concerns

So what can you do about this? Write the MPWMD Board of Directors and explain your concerns about their actions. Let Supervisor Sam Karas, who represents us on the water board, know your feelings about his vote.

You can also write Ed Anton, Chief, Division of Water Rights at the State Water Resources Control Board, P.O. Box 2000, Sacramento, Calif. 95812-2000.

Turning off the taps is not the answer, but neither is giving away water that's not there.

Feast of Lanterns 1996

Feast to celebrate 100th birthday anniversary of 'Mrs. Pacific Grove,' Elmarie Dyke

By BETH PENNEY

THIS WEEK, the annual Pacific Grove Feast of Lanterns celebration takes special note of the 100th anniversary of the birthday of the woman known as "Mrs. Pacific Grove": Elmarie Leslie Hurlburt Hyler Dyke.

The Feast of Lanterns was started 91 years ago, and includes a number of community events that take place in Pacific Grove during Feast of Lanterns week.

Elmarie Dyke and her husband Clyde F. Dyke, then a city councilman, revived the Feast of Lanterns in 1958, after the tradition had lapsed during World War II.

Elmarie served as executive director after Clyde died in 1962, and she ran the Feast of Lanterns single-handedly until her death in 1981.

In honor of Elmarie, this year's opening ceremonies, which were held Tuesday, July 23, were moved from their usual location in a downtown business to Chautauqua Hall and Elmarie Dyke Park, at Central and 16th.

A special section of the Feast's souvenir program is devoted to Elmarie's life and accomplishments, and Mayor Sandy Koffman will acknowledge the anniversary in her opening remarks at the annual pageant on the evening of Saturday, July 27.

The Feast's souvenir buttons this year also commemorate Elmarie.

Traditional events

The first Feast of Lanterns in 1905 was the closing event for Pacific Grove's summer Chautauqua season in what was then a Methodist church retreat.

The format of the Feast event — including the lighting of paper lanterns on the beach, a pageant that retells the love story about a Mandarin's daughter and a poor scholar, the lighted boat parade, and the fireworks display — has remained the same for nearly a century.

Clyde and Elmarie Dyke took the original format of the Feast of Lanterns into account when the event was revived in 1958, and today's Feast has changed very little since that time.

The Feast of Chicken is still served by volunteers from 2 to 7 p.m. on Saturday at Lovers Point. The barbecue includes a half chicken, beans, bread, salad, and a beverage, and costs $6 per person. Free entertainment on the pier from 12:30 p.m. is provided by local musicians and other performers who have always been happy to volunteer their time for this community event.

PG royalty

The Royal Court, made up of seven high school students who are selected to serve as princesses and Queen, is subject to many of the same rules and regulations as the Courts of two decades ago.

Royal Court members this year include:

- Monette Gabriel, a graduate of Pacific Grove High School, Queen Topaz;
- Rosie Marquart, a junior at PG High, Princess Sapphire;
- Rachel Bispo, a sophomore at PG

PRETTY, DARK-haired, dark-eyed Monette Gabriel, a June graduate of Pacific Grove High School, looks like she might be a fairy-tale princess out of a storybook.

Hopes for Fort Ord 'arts city' still alive, compromise expected

■ A scheduling conflict at Tuesday's meeting forced the Monterey County Board of Supervisors to table the issue until Sept. 3.

By SUSAN HAWTHORNE

AFTER A scheduling conflict that left almost no time for a public hearing, the Monterey County Board of Supervisors tabled its consideration of a "arts city" at Fort Ord until September.

The item will be heard at the Supervisors Chambers in the Salinas Courthouse from 2:30 to 3:30 p.m on Sept 3.

The Arts Habitat, as it is known, would be a self-sufficient enclave supporting the visual, performing and literary arts by providing affordable studio and living space for artists.

In a message both to the advocates of an "Arts Habitat" and a competing proposal, a police-training academy, Chairwoman Edith Johnsen exhorted the gathering "to get your house in order" before the board revisits the issue.

She indicated that greater efforts will be necessary to accommodate multiple uses at the former Army base's East Garrison. Besides the Arts Habitat and the police-training facility, a youth camp and an equestrian center are proposed for the 77-acre parcel on a bluff overlooking the Salinas River Valley.

Representative of all the groups agreed to continuing dialogue moving in the direction of a compromise. Up until Tuesday, representatives of the arts village argued a police academy could not successfully coexist with an arts community at the East Garrison.

Proponents of an 'Arts Habitat' at the East Garrison of Fort Ord staged a demonstration before the Supervisors' meeting last Tuesday, July 23.

The 77-acre East Garrison of the former Fort Ord can accommodate multiple uses. The Board of Supervisors will hear from all groups desiring the property on Sept. 3.

Bach festival is latest stop for world-traveling baritone Nomura

By SHAUM MEHRA

CHRISTOPHEREN NOMURA has been singing since age six, and in that time he's traveled throughout much of the world, performing for the likes of Nelson Mandela and former President Gerald Ford.

"I love it," says the baritone. "Sometime it's hard to believe I do what I do. I have to pinch myself."

This is the first year Nomura, 32, has been involved with the Bach Festival. So far, he's impressed.

"I'm thrilled to be up on stage with such great musicians and such great music," he says. "I'm really honored. The enthusiasm of the community and the audience is great. As a consequence, I feel the need to give them the best I have."

Nomura was born in Oakland in 1964 of native-Japanese parents. He began his career with the San Francisco Boy's Choir, for which he sang as a soprano. It was in that chorus that he learned the hard work and dedication it took to sing at a professional level.

Before he was even a teen-ager, Nomura was singing with the San Francisco Opera. He performed in Tosca at age 12 and The Magic Flute at 13.

Nomura

Exposed to the pros

"One reason I'm a singer today is because I was exposed to the pros at such a young age," he says. "They instilled a work ethic and an emphasis on technique that was really important to someone just starting out.

"Sometimes I look back at those times and wonder, 'Wow, how did I do that?' It takes an incredible amount of hard work."

DECORATING

Fair's flower show has categories for novices, experts

By DEBORAH SMITH

FLOWERS, POSIES, blossoms, bouquets, garlands, floral arrangements. All of these words conjure up wonder, delicacy and color.

A memory of wild flowers studding a field, early spring crocuses and snow drops, a tangle of rambling roses, orange trumpet vine — all are balms for the soul.

Plucked and temporarily preserved in a vase of water, flowers enrich our lives. And those of us who delight in arranging flowers are surely blessed.

Often on summer evenings as a youngster I would walk up our village road to greet my father, who would be returning home from his job in New York City. Along the roadside I would gather nosegays of wild flowers, clover, evening primrose, mallow, chicory and ox-eyed daisies.

Later, as a newly married hostess, I picked garden roses, snapdragons, feverfew, sprays of apple blossoms and forsythia and did arrangements as best I could throughout the house and for our dining room table.

But it wasn't until I moved to Carmel and went to work as the assistant floral arranger at Del Monte Lodge that I learned some do's and don'ts about flower arranging, like an arrangement should be one and 1/2 times higher than its container and must incorporate the color of the container into the arrangement.

At The Lodge I was taught by and worked for the head Japanese gardener. Each week we did scores of bud vases, centerpieces for the dining tables, and big splashy arrangements for the buffet table and the front hall.

During the first summer of that job, a friend suggested that I enter the Monterey County Fair with some of my floral designs. Timidly I picked up the entry guide book, was immediately enthralled with the many choices, and my imagination took wing. I entered that year with trepidation, but as I remember I won a couple of ribbons.

During that time I met Eve Matuzek, then the Fair's floral department chairwoman who worked as a florist in Salinas. She and I were true kindred spirits and she nurtured and taught me. Later we became partners and did the flowers at the Beach Club in Pebble Beach and Carmel's Pine Inn, plus weddings, theme parties and holiday decors. Now when I enter the fair each August, I have much more confidence that I did 20 years ago.

Major changes

Now we are approaching County Fair time again, Aug. 20-25, and another chance to enter. This year there are some major changes in the floriculture department which includes the arrangement, cut flowers, potted plant and garden display divisions.

Stephanie Whitehead and Gerry Corn, who are long-time exhibitors and supporters of the fair, will begin their tenure as co-chairwomen. They will be introducing several new events this year, including demonstrations three times per fair day. These include decorating cakes with fresh flowers and making floral arrangements.

Nine judges who adhere to the rules of the National Counsel of State Garden Clubs of America will be on hand the day before the fair opens to award ribbons and prize money to winning flower show entries.

Those interested in participating can pick up a premium entry guide book at 2004 Fairgrounds Road (372-5863). Entry forms must be received at the fairgrounds by Aug. 3.

Exhibitors fall into categories according to ability. A novice is a person who has won zero to five blue ribbons in floral arrangement competitions, whereas intermediates have won six to 10 ribbons, and advanced, 11 to 30.

The masters' category includes teachers, judges or anyone winning more than 31 blue ribbons. There are also commercial and open classifications.

Having established your level of expertise, the next step for those who want to enter is to peruse the entry guide book and choose from more than 60 theme categories, ranging from miniature arrangements (under four inches) to decorated hats, mantles, table settings and wreaths.

CORRECTION ...

Deborah Smith's most recent 'Apron Strings' column ('Banquets to Bach,' July 19 edition, page 3B) contained an editor's error in Bird of Paradise Catering's recipe for Polenta Pound Cake. The cake should be baked for one and one-half hours, not 12 hours as the recipe states.

THEATER REVIEW/Mark Shilstone-Laurent

Director takes risks that (mostly) work in 'J.B.'

GOD IS taking it on the chin lately in beautiful Carmel.

Antonio Salieri, the central character in Amadeus, which just closed a successful run at the Pacific Repertory Theatre, rants and raves at The Big Guy in what basically amounts to a challenge to meet him after school behind the gym.

Now things are just as bad for The Omnipotent One up the hill at the Outdoor Forest Theatre with the opening of J.B.: A Morality Play, the Forest Theatre Guild's latest production, directed by Geoffrey Blaisdell.

If you are The Creator of the Universe you don't really need to pay a lot of attention to the whinings of a few piddling earthlings. But you've gotta believe some of the vitriolic barbs in this production must sting a little.

J.B.'s wife Sarah even goes so far as to decry "God is our enemy!" That's a fine thank you for the Presence that invented chocolate and beer.

J.B. is a souped up version of the Biblical story of Job, a pretty decent fellow whose Faith is tested by The Lord. Accepting a challenge from Satan, He brings tragedy and calamity to Job's life, seeing whether his faith will waver when things aren't all that rosy.

The show asks some very basic questions about the nature of our existence: Is good rewarded and evil punished in the universe? Are we helpless pawns or is there at least the illusion of free will? What is faith?

Solid production

Whatever the answers may be, this is a solid production, well acted and, for the most part, well directed. And these kind of open ended, soul searching questions fit perfectly, nestled among the majestic pines under the starlit canvas at the beautiful Outdoor Forest Theater. You almost get the feeling the Big Guy Himself may just be watching the show.

Many directors turn out fine productions, but there is clearly a sense of "playing it safe" in their concepts and staging. Not so here with Blaisdell. He pushes and blends and mocks theatrical convention, creating a metaphor for life: What is real, what is imagined, when are we acting and when are we not?

Blaisdell uses underscoring, sound effects, masks and shifting time periods to create a production that is anything but safe or conventional. For the most part, this "make the bold choice/dare to fail" approach works well and keeps the evening moving along.

He does, however, employ a tactic of making no attempt to hide the actors or technicians before and often during the show. This works fine in establishing a certain atmosphere that works well for this play, but it also created a few problems.

Strange wandering

Especially before the show begins, the actors and technicians needed to more clearly commit to this "now I'm me/now I'm part of the show" convention. As audience members we shouldn't have to be guessing whether this is a conscious, stylistic choice or just sloppiness on the part of the actors and technicians.

Similarly, this backstage wandering does continue throughout the play, occasionally drawing focus from and weakening a few key scenes. But for the most part the directoral choices are well thought out and well executed.

As for the acting, there are plenty of commendable performances here. Henry Littlefield takes the lead role of J.B. In most of the first act, the J.B. character is basically showing what a nice guy he is so that we'll feel terrible when he gets messed around so badly.

Littlefield is almost too nice in his approach early on. He plays it so righteous, courteous and kind that you want to slap him rather than connect and suffer with him. But he turns it on in Act Two and shines in the heavier scenes.

Robert Wilmot and Patrick McAnaney take the roles of God and Satan, respectively, as Mr. Zuss and Mr. Nickles. They are both strong.

Peter Eberhardt and Kevin Hanstick also shine in supporting roles, as does Jennifer Forbes as Job's wife Sarah. The entire cast is pretty balanced with no glaring weak links.

But for me the real star of the show was the four-foot-tall mask of God. On occasion Mr. Zuss and Mr. Nickles would speak through their masks with distorted, prerecorded voices.

Mr. Zuss' God mask (designed by Carey Crockett) and voice are absolutely riveting. Unfortunately, we don't hear from the masks at all in Act Two. I for one missed them.

Technically the production is solid. The costumes, lighting and set design all support well.

Easy to recommend

This one is pretty easy to recommend. There's always the fantastic setting of the Outdoor Forest Theater, and the production itself is strong, visually and aurally interesting and for the most part well acted and directed.

And here's one last perk — the play's less than two hours in length, so you're on your way home before 10 p.m.!

Soloists steal show in Tuesday night Haydn concert

By NATHALIE PLOTKIN
Peninsula Music Critic

TUESDAY IS Haydn night at the Carmel Bach Festival. Maestro Bruno Weil's Bach is exemplary, but his heart obviously belongs to Papa Haydn.

There was a joyousness pervading the evening, reflecting the musical personality of a universally beloved composer. The result was a delight from beginning to end.

The Symphony No. 46 in B Major is a charming product of Haydn's "Storm and Stress" period. It has the sudden and colorful dynamic contrasts and strong dramatic passages that characterize this style. Also the key signature of five sharps (very difficult to keep in tune) exerts some influence on the orchestral attacks.

The playing of the chamber-sized orchestra was controlled and responsive to Weil's clearly defined interpretation. The Adagio with its contrast of fragile musical statements and strongly stated answers was very well traversed.

The Sinfonia Concertante in B -Flat Major, composed 20 years later during Haydn's first trip to London, is a product of his mature years, yet it bubbles with joy and liveliness.

Elizabeth Wallfisch, violin; Douglas McNames, cello; Bernhard Heinrichs, oboe and Jesse Read, bassoon, were the four soloists whose abilities were so admirably combined in the course of the work.

This is endearing music and the four soloists share its melodious and lighthearted pages, whether playing together or apart (but always in harmony), bringing out the flowery cadenzas and high glittering floating passages in the work.

Jesse Read

The slow movement was particularly delightful. Each soloist displayed his or her artistry while carrying the melodic thrust, with the orchestra supplying the harmony very sensitively.

After the intermission, the full vocal and instrumental forces of the Festival (100 fine musicians) came together in a splendid performance of the Mass in D Minor (Nelson Mass). Delivering one of the most jubilant settings of the text in the entire choral literature, the heartfelt enthusiasm projected by all of the participants under Weil's guidance was irresistible.

Soloists commended

After the resplendent full-throated choral "Kyrie" that begins the work, soprano Rosa Lamoreaux, whose lovely voice I have enjoyed at every concert so far this week, sang her elaborate coloratura solo with soaring tone. The chorus continued with fervid, brilliant sound, creating a stirring operatic forcefulness.

During the "Gloria," Lamoreaux was again a bright, shining vocal presence.

In the "Gratias agimus," mezzo-soprano Catherine Robbin made a warm, lovely contribution. Tenor Benjamin Butterfield and bass Christopheren Nomura sang with a sensitive blend of fine vocalism. Their music is graceful and full of melody and they all delivered it with strong well projected tone and musicality.

The "Qui Tollis" is another extended bass solo and Nomura sang with nobility, resonance and great understanding. The interplay between the chorus and soloists was particularly well achieved. The Festival Chorus is an outstanding force with its high discipline, concentration and unity of purpose, all serving to create a dramatically pleasing intensity.

Gem follows gem as this beautifully constructed, well-proportioned composition unfolds. During the many operatic vocal flights, the orchestra was no mere accompanying body. Their share of the undertaking was happily integrated into the entire fabric. They were equally to be praised as they busily supplied variety and richness to the overall endeavor.

Congratulations to one and all for a richly fulfilling concert.

This concert repeats at 8 p.m. Tuesday, July 30 at Sunset Theater in Carmel.

Thursday is concertmistress Wallfisch's night to shine

By NATHALIE PLOTKIN

THURSDAY NIGHT is Elizabeth Wallfisch's personal bailiwick at the Carmel Bach Festival.

As concertmistress and principal violin soloist, her boundless warmth, energy, impish wit and her absolute mastery of the art of the Baroque violin style has captivated her audiences.

Capitalizing on her sweeping success with "An Evening of Spectacular Italian Concertos" last year, Wallfisch continued with "More Spectacular Italian Concertos" this time. The Festival strings plus harpsichordist John Butt gave an excellent account, accompanying concertos by Corelli, Handel, Vivaldi and Locatelli with finesse.

Wallfisch used some musically erudite yet amusing comments culled from the writing of Johann Quantz, flute teacher and court composer for Frederick the Great, to enliven the program.

In Corelli's Concerto Grosso in D Major Op. 6 No. 4 for two violins, David Myford joined Wallfisch in a finely crafted, delicately ornamented realization. There was an airy sweetness to the playing.

Then came some quotes from Quantz, whose book on the art of playing the transverse flute is a major source of information about 18th century musical practice. In the course of the evening we heard advice about playing in public, as well as the duties of an orchestra accompanying soloists. There were choice negative remarks about the quality of viola players (which didn't go over too well) and finally about cadenzas, which Quantz described as a necessary evil.

Pathos and tenderness

In between all of this, we heard some lovely music, expertly performed. Vivaldi's Concerto in E Minor Op. 11, No. 12 displayed Wallfisch's ability to bring out the pathos and tenderness of a composer, shown here in an unusual contemplative mood.

A Concerto for Four Violins by Locatelli was a delightful exercise in musical fun as the intricate meshings and permutations of the four soloists were carried through. The string tone was very fine as the ideas flowed along from player to player.

Handel's Concerto Grosso in A Major Op. 6, No. 11 could be considered the major work on the program. Its dimensions are larger, its rhythms are elegant and there is more expressive depth to be heard. Soloists Wallfisch and Myford, playing amidst almost symphonic sound from the orchestra, made this a substantial undertaking.

A Vivaldi concerto for violin and cello subtitled "Proteus, or the world upside-down" involved violinist David Myford and cellist Douglas McNames in many seating changes and backstage crossings instead of string crossings. All the running around was fun, but also a distraction from some very accomplished playing.

Elizabeth Wallfisch

Spectacular performance

The closing work featured a spectacular performance of yet another Vivaldi violin concerto, this one in D Major, Op. 7, No. 11. Wallfisch's flying fingers and flexible bow arm were highlighted in passage work that made her sound like the best square dance fiddler in the world, but that genre doesn't usually offer flawless technique and musical finesse.

A brilliant and extended concluding cadenza (I wish I had timed it) which went on and on while the other musicians humorously acted out their increasing impatience, elicited long lasting applause from an obviously amused and pleased audience.

This concert repeats Thursday, Aug. 1 at 8 p.m. in Sunset Theater in Carmel.

Going to college helped Nomura feel 'normal'

After graduating from high school, Nomura attended Tufts University in Boston. Not completely sure that music was the ultimate career path he would follow, he decided to pursue a dual major, studying both music and political science. It's a path he's glad he took.

"When I started college I believed I wanted to practice international law," Nomura says. "What I really wanted, though, was the real college experience. It's something that a lot of talented young musicians don't get. But it was important to me. It allowed me to fulfill my boyhood dreams (of) being 'normal.'"

Nomura eventually decided to concentrate on music, receiving his master's degree with Distinction in Performance from Tufts along with an Artist Diploma from the New England Conservatory of Music.

But it wasn't until 1990, when Nomura received a Fulbright Grant to study in Germany, that he came to the realization that music could actually earn him a living.

"I realized, 'Hey, this is something people are willing to support me at — giving me money, allowing me to pursue my dream.' I felt a responsibility to them. And as I traveled around Germany I realized that I really wanted to give it a shot."

Since that time, Nomura has been singing with Young Concert Artists, based in New York City. His involvement with this group has allowed him to travel throughout the United States and Eastern Europe as well as Africa and Japan. He performed as soloist with the Boston Symphony in Carl Orff's Carmina Burana conducted by Seiji Ozawa, and in the Beethoven Choral Fantasy directed by John Oliver.

The Japanese trip, however, held the deepest meaning for Nomura. It was the first time he'd been back to his parents' homeland since he was a small boy, and the very first time he'd ever performed before his entire family.

"I had reservations about how they would accept me back, but they welcomed me with open arms, both as an American and as someone of Japanese descent. Still, I've sung in every situation conceivable, but I had the butterflies all over. It was the most nervous I've ever been in my musical career. Usually I get excited, not nervous."

After the Bach Festival he is heading back to Boston to continue performing with the Young Concert Artists, and then it's off to Idaho, Louisiana, Canada and New York.

"It can get tiring being on the road all the time, there's no question," Nomura says. "But I enjoy it. If I didn't, I'd be in the wrong business."

Credit crunch over, lenders offer ready capital

AT THE PACIFIC Coast Builders Conference in San Francisco last month, bankers were out in force eager to lend on California construction projects. Bank of America had a big booth in the exhibit hall, Sanwa Bank had a cocktail party at the Marriott Hotel, and Union Bank hosted a lavish affair at the prestigious World Trade Club.

California Trends

By Bradley Inman

Every building boom has one all important ingredient: capital. When builders can get loans to build, construction booms. When they can't, it stops.

Forecasts that California construction will increase 30 percent or more this year is in part a response to improvements to the state's economy, but willing and eager lenders also explain the pronounced recovery in the development climate.

Just three years ago, "it got so bad, you wouldn't even get on the telephone and call a lender about a loan," said San Francisco builder Rick Holliday. Then, "loan officers were evaluated by how many accounts they shut down and how many bad loans they cleaned up. Now they are back and willing to make loans again."

Indeed, times have changed.

Token of appreciation

In the mid 1980s, Wells Fargo hosted a luncheon in its executive dining room for 20 or so builders who did a considerable amount of business with the San Francisco-based bank. As a token of the bank's appreciation, the name cards on the place settings were a credit card embossed with the attendee's name, which inferred the trust and the bond between the bank and the builder.

By the early 1990s, Wells Fargo was all but out of the construction lending business and was involved in intense workouts on troubled loans that it made to builders, including some of those who attended the exclusive luncheon.

Struggling to fill the credit gap, the state legislature created special construction lending funds in the early 1990s and the California Public Employees Retirement Fund was persuaded to begin making real estate loans.

Today, government funds are unnecessary because the

Miller, Nelson new partners at Mitchell Group

RHENDA MILLER and Kent Nelson, managing brokers of The Mitchell Group, have been made partners of the Carmel-based real estate agency.

The promotion took effect July 1 and moved Miller and Nelson into full-time management roles, according to Hallie Mitchell Dow and Bill Mitchell, owners of The Mitchell Group.

The announcement of the new partners coincides with the agency's recent expansion.

"In one year, we have grown from one office with 20 agents to three offices with 50 full-time agents, a property management department and a mortgage brokerage," Mitchell Dow said.

The Mitchell Group, which debuted in 1975 with a downtown Carmel office, opened an office in the Carmel Rancho shopping area in 1995 and then acquired Porter Marquard Realty in Carmel Valley in January of this year.

The two new partners are active in the industry — Nelson is the president of the Monterey County Association of Realtors, while Miller is the immediate past president of the Carmel Association of Realtors.

Local Realtors treated to promising outlook

Realtor Link

By Jeanette Menter

LESLIE APPLETON-YOUNG of the California Association of Realtors offered a bounty of statistics on local, statewide and national real estate and industry trends at last month's membership meeting of the Monterey County Association of Realtors.

Here's a closer look:

■ Good News. In addition to stating that her research has made her a believer in the bond market, Appleton-Young also speculated that interest rates will stay low with no major increases in the third quarter.

She doesn't see the economy overheating and believes that the correction of 1995 is almost over. Additionally, she said consumer confidence is up, retail sales are recovering, mortgage rates are favorable and housing is becoming more affordable.

■ State Forecast. Although we are two to three years behind the rest of the nation in the recovery cycle, California will create 1 million new jobs through 1998, with growth seen in the high-tech, travel and entertainment industries.

A total of 45,700 jobs were created in May alone, she noted. Personal income is increasing, as witnessed by a 5.2 percent increase in 1995. Meanwhile, unemployment is 7.2 percent — the lowest level in five years.

■ Real Estate Outlook. Appleton-Young said the resale market is making a comeback with 462,000 transactions, which represents an increase of 8.6 percent over 1995 in California.

Also, prices are bottoming out with the median price of homes at $179,050. Locally, the median price of a home is now $218,700 down from $223,700 a year ago. Although mortgage rates are moving up again, they are still below the December 1994 mark.

Studies show that 30 percent of those looking for homes in the Monterey area can now afford to buy, compared to just 10 percent in May 1990. Housing permits are still slow, but are up 48.7 percent in the first four months of this year.

private lending sector is anxious to ride the recovery.

The funds are coming from several different directions. For example, Wall Street is flush with capital, with firms such as Morgan Stanley, JP Morgan and Goldman Sachs all offering real estate mutual funds for California real estate projects.

And despite problems with earlier investments in the state's property market, the largest real estate lender to U.S. real estate continues to be Japanese lender Nomura Securities of Tokyo.

Because too much or too little capital is often behind California's see-saw real estate market, the question is whether the current enthusiasm will spawn speculation and overbuilding.

In the 1980s, the term "stupid money" was coined by the building industry to describe the oversupply of capital. Builders could easily get loans for projects that didn't make economic and sometimes environmental sense and that required little or no equity.

Real estate analyst Christopher J. Hartung of Montgomery Securities said the dangers of poorly written loans do not exist today because lenders learned their lesson from before.

"The days of the super tightfisted lender may be over, but the requirements for loans are much more conservative," Hartung said.

Lenders are requiring builders to put up their own cash and they are required to make regular payments on the principal. In the go-go 1980s, builders got 100 percent financing and weren't required to pay back anything until the project was completed and sold.

When the recession hit and the project didn't sell, lenders would foreclose on the properties.

Hartung said that lenders today do a better job of "second guessing" builders. Underwriters have access to better information on economic conditions, demographics and on the local market where the project is being built.

"Instead of just listening to the arguments of the builder," Hartung said, "lenders can better examine whether there is any truth to the promise."

HOUSE OF THE WEEK

LOCATED IN the prized sunbelt in Pebble Beach, this hilltop residence enjoys majestic views of Carmel Bay, Point Lobos and the Carmel Meadows.

A stained-glass window and skylight illuminate the oak entryway, which leads to a pine-paneled living room with a high-beamed ceiling, brick fireplace and sliding glass door overlooking a wrap-around deck.

Hardwood floors, recessed lighting and a custom wet bar inject the dining room with a soothing and gracious atmosphere. The sunlit kitchen features a butcher block island, oak cabinetry and tile counters. An additional dining area offers grand coastal views through large bay windows, and the family room opens to a panoramic balcony.

The two-bedroom suites upstairs offer even more outstanding views, and the master suite commands attention with a vaulted ceiling, double closets and his and hers vanities.

By completely realizing its view potential, this home will constantly remind its owners of their beautiful surroundings.

MOVIE REVIEW/Craig Arnott

'Courage' an intelligent, engrossing war film

THE DIMMING spectacle of the Gulf War has been temporarily illuminated by Courage Under Fire, an involving study of the definition of heroism and one of the few high points of a largely soulless summer movie season.

Denzel Washington ably tackles his role as an Army lieutenant suffering post-war grief in 'Courage Under Fire.'

The film hits the ground running as Lt. Nathaniel Serling (Denzel Washington), with a measure of cockiness, commands his tank across the rolling sand dunes of Kuwait. In a short while he is confronted by a line of aggressive Iraqi tanks. He returns fire, destroying one of his own tanks in the confusion of night battle.

Returning home to the banality of a desk job and under secret investigation, Serling of his own guilt and sorrow and allow him to regain the mantle of dutiful officer.

RATING:
Excellent ★★★★, Good ★★★, Fair ★★, Poor ★

Lt. Serling is awash in a mood of numb detachment. His wife and children become little more than background noise and he begins to drink heavily.

Serling's Army training hasn't allowed for a gaffe of this magnitude; the military, which regards unquestioning obedience as a virtue and stonewalling as an art, ignores the undercurrents of doubt and regret attached to his silent grieving.

A petty comfort is Serling's new assignment of evaluating the candidacy of a Medivac pilot for a posthumous Medal of Honor. Capt. Karen Walden (Meg Ryan) would become the first female recipient of the medal.

The grim job seems to temporarily free

Conflicting stories

As Serling gradually unearths the circumstances surrounding the messy ambush and evacuation which resulted in Walden's death, he discovers that the surviving crew all have different interpretations of the events. A young medic (Matt Damon) describes Walden in angelic terms while a tough Marine (Lou Diamond Phillips) portrays her as spineless.

Instead of muddling the plot, though, these divergent views reveal volumes about the characters of the speakers and demand a good deal of involvement from the audience, who must become psychological sleuths in order to separate what actually happened from what a character perceived (or wished) had occurred. Accurately, the film's tag line is: "In wartime, the first casualty is always truth."

Visually, Courage Under Fire is arresting in its depiction of the loud chaos of war as it makes the heady mix of gunfire, adrenaline and enveloping fear palpable.

In comparison, the domestic scenes of

Meg Ryan surprisingly convincing in combat mode in 'Courage'

Serling's life to seem a little pat and staged. Director Edward Zwick's background in television (thirtysomething) appears to still be tugging at him.

Another distinction is the film's choice of the Gulf War as its background; many of the events and sentiments are fresh in the memory, and the audience is able to better comprehend some of the history by seeing how the war affected the participants, however fictionally.

Washington, who gives off a casual air of decency and strength, is in many ways the ideal actor to convey Serling's tremendous and largely unspoken agony.

Ryan, while surprisingly convincing in a combat mode, still seems to have taken her role for its departure status.

Courage Under Fire should be commended for how thoroughly it sorts through facts and perceptions to arrive at an emotional clarity that doesn't insult the intelligence of the audience.

The truths about courage and valor, seen here in the context of recent and unsettling events, are ultimately given a resonance that is nearly mythological.

Club XIX chef Hubert Keller and executive chef Lisa Magadini with toastmaster David Oliver enjoy the reopening of Club XIX at The Lodge at Pebble Beach on Thursday, July 18.

Glenn Hammer, Bert Cutino, Jean Hurd and Pierre Bain were among the guests at the reception and dinner marking the reopening of Club XIX at The Lodge at Pebble Beach.

Gourmet dinner celebrates 'new' Club XIX in grand style

Social Spotlight

By Dodie Barkley

AH, GOURMETS of the Monterey Peninsula, take note!

If you were not at the welcome reception for the new look of Club XIX at The Lodge at Pebble Beach Thursday, July 18, you missed delicious contemporary French cuisine by acclaimed chef Hubert Keller and executive chef Lisa Magadini.

Club XIX, located in The Lodge opposite the 18th hole at Pebble Beach, overlooking a panoramic view of Stillwater Cove, was the right setting for a four-course dinner paired with a fabulous selection of wines.

The renovated bistro, with light sand-colored walls, now has two fireplaces flanking the outdoor section of the facility and is surrounded by walls of windows to keep stiff breezes from blowing away the delicate aromas of food on your plate. And what aromas!

Among the gourmets invited were Peninsula chefs Pierre Bain, Beat Geiger, Glenn Hammer and Bert Cutino. Hammer gave Club XIX an A-one rating for table service, beautiful surroundings and the presentation of the food.

Other guests included toastmaster David Oliver, Char Etienne, Hank and Rolande Ketcham, Jean Hurd, Jenefee and Tom Bruce, Phyllis Hubbard, Larry and Peppy Frisone and Dennis and Karen LeVett.

Pebble Beach officials were also in attendance. John M. Chadwell, new Pebble Beach Co. president and chief operating officer, was joined by Seishi Jiromaru, executive vice president of the Lone Cypress Co., and Lone Cypress Co. director Takeshi Kusafuka.

And what food! Maître d' Mario Beretti sat me down in front of a tomato and lobster salad with cucumber vinaigrette, followed by sea bass with ratatouille crust on a bed of roasted garlic, mashed potatoes and sun dried tomato au jus.

The main course of boneless quail stuffed with Swiss chard and pine nuts in a rich merlot wine sauce conquered the taste buds — until the dessert came. Cinnamon apple crisp served with a bittersweet chocolate gratin, topped off with a 1994 Muscat de beaumes de Venise by Paul Jaboulet, completed my dinner fantasy of the year.

On a scale of zero to 10 I'd give the evening a high 11, for the food, the service and the fantastic scenery, both inside and out of Club XIX.

■ Anchors Aweigh! at Highlands Inn

When you're sitting in the Surf Room at the Highlands Inn, watching the ocean strike the soft white rocks of Pt. Lobos and listening to the sweet sounds of pianist Joey Intintoli and drummer Lawrence Vera, life is quite good.

Katherine Becker, an ex-model with a gorgeous face, lovely body and the best pair of legs I've seen west of the Pecos, arranged "Anchors Aweigh — A Show of Fashions," held Monday, July 15 at the Highlands Inn in Carmel Highlands.

Fashions from High Tide, a Carmel swimwear and sports boutique, and Rittmaster of Carmel were presented following a delicious luncheon, and they were quite wonderful. A portion of the proceeds from the show benefited the Lucile Packard Children's Hospital in Palo Alto.

Marlene Carlson, development director of the hospital, spoke of the many programs available there for children with cancer, and she thanked the ladies present for their donations.

High Tide clothes featured lovely swimsuits with multicolored sarongs. White, red and blue shorts sets with shoes and hats to match were adorable. Alice Nunes modeled a white bathing suit with a long white silk body robe that was just breathtaking.

Rittmaster's clothes were equally magnificent. Lightest of light pink shorts and blouses, jumpsuits in beige and black, wonderful blue denim outfits that were so elegant they could be worn at any function, and short black chiffon cocktail dresses with fuchsia collars and low backs, kept the audience applauding. Yoko Taylor, in a black evening gown with gorgeous black lace sleeves, was a knockout!

Several door prizes were awarded, including dinner at Monterey Joe's, a $50 gift certificate from Lugano Swiss Bistro in The Barnyard in Carmel, and a gift basket from the Highlands Inn.

Becker thanked everyone for attending, adding that her

Youngsters at the Park Branch of the Harrison Memorial Library were entertained Wednesday, July 17 by the Carmel Ballet Academy dancers.

next fashion show will be in November.

■ Ballet meets the library

There's an old song which begins: "A, you're adorable, B, you're so beautiful, C, you're a bundle full of charms — "

That aptly describes what took place Wednesday, July 17 at the Harrison Memorial Library Park Branch in Carmel.

Carol Benton of the Carmel Ballet Academy brought tiny tots and adolescents, who danced sections of The Nutcracker Suite for other youths who sat on the floor in rapt attention.

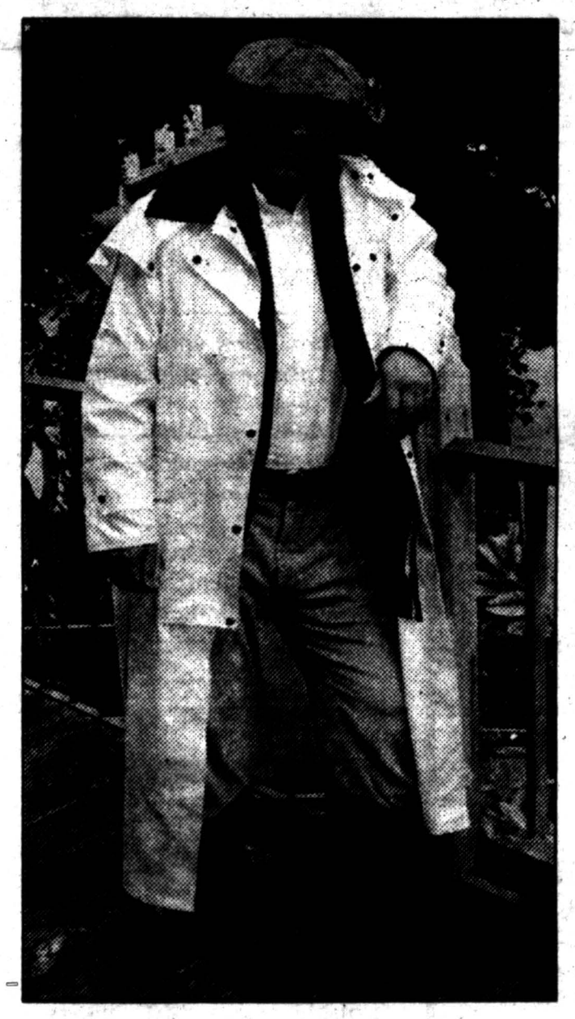
The dancing was held to show the children how a book is transformed into a ballet or other dance. Benton held up the Nutcracker book to show the children that the ballet was created from it.

Benton also showed the youths different types of ballet shoes, movements and costumes.

Tap dancer Katherine Balesteri was a standout, as was William Hambro, a tiny cherub in a green sequined shirt.

Following the program, Carmel Public Library Foundation member Cindy Murphy was honored for her generous sponsorship of the Children's Library Summer Reading Program.

The youths and guests were then treated to a reception with cookies and juice.



Taelen Thomas, as Jack London, entertained at the Highlands Inn 80th anniversary.

Derek Rayne and his wife Gerda celebrated Derek's 80th birthday on Sunday, July 14 by attending the Highlands Inn 80th anniversary high tea.

■ Highlands Inn marks 80 years

In July of 1917 the first guests were welcomed to the newly-completed Highlands Inn's enormous Fireside Lobby with stone fireplaces at each end and a dining room looking out to sea. Eighty years later, the lobby remains a focal point of the inn.

To celebrate its 80th anniversary, Highlands Inn offered a high tea Sunday, July 14 featuring storytellers, Missy Jenkins on a Scottish bagpipe and poets who recalled the early days of the inn.

Taelen Thomas portrayed novelist Jack London, who described the Carmel Highlands when they were once covered with strawberries growing wild. He talked about a five-day welcoming party with picnics on the Highlands, accompanied by writers George Sterling, Mary Austin, Upton Sinclair, Sinclair Lewis, Ambrose Bierce and other famous Carmel characters of the early 1900s.

Thomas spoke and looked so much like London, it was easy to get carried away to the actual time period — a fabulous portrayal.

It was Derek Rayne's 80th birthday, so he and his wife, Gerda, took advantage of the $80 rate the inn was offering for the day and stayed overnight.

The high tea was a magnificently delicious one, with scones and jellies, tea sandwiches and delicious tiny pastries. The coffees and teas were special blends. A lovely day!

■ Monterey Museum of Art's good news

La Mirada was the best place for the Monterey Museum of Art (MMA) to hold its annual meeting and barbecue Wednesday, July 17, because the best news was announced — the museum has turned its financial picture around in 1995-96: it is in the black!

Gloria Costa, Al Chapin and Mildred Ferguson presented a $5,000 check to the Monterey Museum of Art on Wednesday, July 17.

After welcoming guests, MMA president Jess Brown spoke glowingly of how the museum staff, trustees, volunteers and artists worked together like an "Olympic team," bringing in income, increasing membership, cutting back expenses and opening up the Buck Education Center, to help the museum achieve its first year in the black!

MMA executive director Richard Gadd related many events that were relevant to the ongoing success of the museum, like fund raising and the long-term endowment fund.

Al Chapin, a board member of The Jesters, who are the fund raising arm of the museum, presented a check for $5,000 to Brown, which put the museum in the black to the tune of more than $11,000. Tremendous applause followed.

It was touching and grand to see people who have worked so hard to help the museum, like Steve and Dolores Gunia, Al Rilling, Fleece Dennis, Virginia Stone, Lydia Criley, Gloria Costa, Mildred Ferguson, Anne Nielsen, Lucille Huntington, Nadine Cox and so many others.

Gabriel had 4.37 GPA at PGHS; off to Notre Dame in fall

night, July 27, during the annual Feast of Lanterns pageant on the Pacific Grove pier.

Monette, the daughter of Montaz and Claudette Gabriel, was born in Modesto and moved to Pacific Grove with her family when she was in the eighth grade.

She said the Feast of Lanterns fascinated her even before the family's move to the Peninsula. While they lived in Modesto, the Gabriels visited here in the summer to escape the Central Valley's heat, and they attended the Feast of Lanterns often.

But, Gabriel said of her desire to be a member of the Feast of Lanterns Royal Court, "I was too nervous to try out my eighth grade and freshman year. I thought I wouldn't make it."

Young women in grades eight through 12 who live in Pacific Grove are eligible to apply for positions on the Court. Those selected as Queen Topaz have usually served two or more years as princesses.

A queen's duties

When Gabriel got up the nerve to try out her sophomore year, she was selected by a panel of five judges. She served as Princess Aquamarine in 1994 and as Princess Jade in 1995.

As Queen Topaz, she is responsible for schooling the other six members of the Court, three of whom are new to the group this year, in Court protocol, including adherence to rules about makeup, jewelry, conduct, and how to deal with the public.

The Queen and her mother arrange the summer's extensive Court calendar of visits, in full Court costume, to schools, retirement homes, and various events.

Impressive career

Gabriel is certainly no stranger to hard work. During her high school career, she has been Editor in Chief of the school newspaper, president of the Key Club, and Color Guard Captain for the high school's marching band.

Gabriel, who graduated in the top 10 percent of her class with a 4.37 GPA, has been named the Most Valuable Student by the Elks Club and the Best All-Around Junior by the Rotarians. She was a Gold Seal Bearer in the California Scholarship Federation and a member of the Interact Club.

She also served three years on the Associated Student Body Council, as sophomore class secretary, junior class president, and senior class representative. Somehow, she found time to work part-time at the Hallmark store in downtown Pacific Grove, a job she continues to hold during this busy summer.

Gabriel will attend the College of Notre Dame in Belmont, Calif. in the fall. She has been awarded what she said is "almost a full-tuition scholarship." She will major in biology, although she does not yet have a specific career plan in mind.

For now, she's concentrating on her duties as Queen Topaz. "It's an honor to be an ambassador of Pacific Grove," she says.

Elmarie Dyke's spirit remains with Feast each year

High, Princess Rose Quartz;

- Erica Clay, a sophomore at PG High, Princess Jade;
- Alicia Foster, a sophomore at PG High, Princess Emerald;
- Delia Fuerst, a sophomore at Santa Catalina School, Princess Turquoise; and
- Kaylan Miller, a sophomore at PG High, Princess Aquamarine.

The Saturday evening pageant, directed by former Court member Marabee Boone, has undergone some revision but retains the same flavor that it has had for 38 years.

Townspeople still gather on the beach and on the waterfront on Saturday night carrying lighted paper lanterns to watch the familiar pageant unfold while a sea serpent bobs in the cove. The mandarin selects a rich man for his daughter's husband and mounts a wedding celebration that includes belly dancers and other entertainment, but the beautiful Queen Topaz resists.

As darkness falls, the pageant's story ends with the Mandarin's order that Torii gates be lighted and fireworks be set off to light up the sky so that he can search for his daughter, who has fled with her poor lover.

During the week

Several events lead up to Saturday's unique festivities. On Friday afternoon, the annual Children's Pet Parade assembles at Caledonia Park behind the Post Office at 2 p.m. There is no cost to enter, and all participants will receive a ribbon.

This year, the Grand Marshal of the Pet Parade is Ruby Nodilo, who founded the parade in 1952 and who returns to the area from her home in Bend, Ore., to lead the parade. The PG Post Office will revive its tradition of distributing free Popsicles to participants after the parade this year.

On Friday evening, the annual Street Dance starts at 6 at Lighthouse Square, in front of the Post Office. This event, for which there is no charge, features demonstrations and participatory dancing by several local dance groups, including Estampa de las Americas, the Hora Karnel Israeli Folkdancers, the Greek Village Dancers of the Monterey Peninsula, and the MPC Line Dancing Group.

Children's dances such as the Bunny Hop and the Hokey-Pokey will be led by the Royal Court. Souvenirs and refreshments will be on sale, with proceeds benefiting the Feast of Lanterns.

The Feast of Lanterns officially concludes on Sunday, with a concert and ice cream social at the First United Methodist Church of Pacific Grove. Admission to the concert is free, and ice cream is 25 cents per scoop.

Closing ceremonies take place after Sunday's concert.

The Feast of Lanterns Board of Directors owes a great debt to the woman it honors this year, "Mrs. Pacific Grove," for her three decades of work on the Feast.

Elmarie Dyke may no longer be alive, but her spirit remains among the hardworking volunteers who participate each year in Pacific Grove's Feast of Lanterns.
